Inadequate Diets Hamper Growth And Learning

Only 50 percent of our national population eats well, according to a 1965 food consumption survey. This is 10 percent less than was reported in a similar survey made in 1955.

In the United States we are touched by hunger in the "have not nations", but the facts are that within our borders too many Americans are not well fed. The extent of poor nutrition is not known in any village, borough, or city of our "rich" country. How can we use our resources to correct faulty eating habits?

Awakening leadership to the profits of sound nutrition is an American frontier. Each day millions of children from all economic levels, go to school without breakfast. Sending a child to school without breakfast hampers his growth and learning ability. It is impossible to assess the damage to present and future health when improper diets are tolerated.

Poor nutrition is also related to medical, dental, and doctor bills. Faulty eating habits may be costing far more than we realize. It is economically sound to learn and practice good eating habits every day.

Give Bathing Suits Proper Care For Longer Wear, Appearance.

Bathing Suits come in a wide variety of colors, textures, and fibers which require proper care to maintain their good looks.

Today's gaily colored suits are resistant to strong sunlight, but will fade or discolor if not rinsed or washed after each wearing. Laundering remove salt, chlorine, perspiration, suntan lotions, and oil that can get into and weaken fibers.

Most manufacturers recommend hand-laundering bathing suits with mild soap and lukewarm water. However, you can put suits made of synthetic fibers into an automatic washer if you use a short cycle, about 3 minutes and warm water, about 105 degrees.

Suits elasticized with spandex fibers may be tumble-dried in an automatic dryer at a low heat setting for 10 to 15 minutes. You must line-dry elasticized or rubber padded suits. To preserve color and durability, remove suits from the line as soon as they are dry.

Timely Tips for Women

Know Differences Between Fashion, Style, Fad To Be Well Dressed

Although you may have no desire to be named one of the ten best dressed women in America — you want to make a pleasing appearance. Understanding the difference between fashion, style, and fad may help you achieve a well-dressed look.

The terms style and fashion are sometimes used interchangeably. A style is any particular and individual article of apparel that's different from any other. Fashion is a process of change in the development of styles and is popular at the moment.

To be fashionable is to be in vogue, whether or not the current style is becoming. High fashion usually means the newest fashion, often unusual and generally expensive. But the high fashion of today often becomes the middle-of-the-road fashion of tomorrow, and sometimes the classic of the day after tomorrow.

A fad usually has a short life and is more of an eye and money catcher. Although some fads are practical, most of them tend to downgrade a woman's overall appearance.

To be well dressed, select current styles flattering to you and ignore those that aren't. Set for your goal an attractive, distinctive appearance and strive to be appropriately dressed for the occasion. Know how to distin-

They Thought They Had It

Despite general prosperity in the United States, many families with seemingly adequate incomes are managing to get themselves into deep financial trouble.

If you don't believe it, take a look at the extreme cases — the 182,000 individuals who this year are expected to file personal bankruptcy proceedings.

Many of these financial tragedies could have been avoided, reports the Institute of Life Insurance.

Studies of people in bankruptcy show that many of them are in financial straits because they have, over a long period of time, let relatively small debts accumulate until they were unmanageable.

The typical bankrupt person is not disadvantaged. He is a man in the prime of his life—the mid - 30's. He has a job, perhaps in a local manufacturing plant. He has a wife and three children and a reputation as a good father and husband.

What has he done wrong? Usually, somewhere along the line he has picked up the habit of buying on credit without regard to how much money he will have to pay off his bills.

The basic reason for most personal bankruptcies, according to financial authorities, is the person's inability to manage his money. In addition to buying more on credit than he can afford, he spends too much on seemingly small luxuries—entertainment, appliances and the like.

Much is being done to avert future family financial failures. Congress has recently passed a "truth-lending" bill, to make sure how much interest they will pay on their purchases. (The law goes into effect next year.)

Many private organizations—economic groups, businesses, educators, churches and consumer advisors — have established community workshops, clinics and counseling services to help people avoid financial crisis. Many primary and secondary schools and youth groups, utilizing information and booklets supplied by financial institutions, have organized courses to teach youngsters the concepts of money management.

May Improve Buck Teeth

Not all protruding teeth need braces. Sometimes they correct themselves. This comforting (and economical) news comes from Dr. LaForrest D. Garner, associate professor of Orthodontics at Indiana University School of Medicine here.

In a recent paper Dr. Garner reported that sometimes "mixed dentition" occurs in youngsters between seven and 14 years of age. This is, baby teeth remain in the dental arch while the second teeth are coming in. This sometimes causes a flared or bucked tooth appearance. However, this may be self-correcting, providing there is no underlying skeletal problem, or if persistent finger sucking, tongue twisting or lip biting don't interfere.

Usually, Dr. Garner notes, normal lip pressure and soft tissue development result in the correct positioning of the Spaces between various teeth also often close up as the second teeth come in and develop.

Dr. Garner emphasized, however, that "all deviation in tooth alignment . . . should be examined and analyzed by a competent orthodontist." In other words, a visit to the dentist — a regular visit — is part of good dental health.

Also, building permits help control zoning. Knowledge by borough officials of what building is to be done helps prevent the erection of structures which violate the code and thereby violate the rights of the neighbors.

Zoning Officer Robert Kline told us this week that since the advertisement appeared in the Bulletin about three weeks ago he has been issuing more permits than ever before.
