Actually, Donegal doesn't have that kind of money to spend, even when the job is mandated by the State Board of Education. The local district has been frugal by spreading the work around to those who could and would help.

But, as in most cases, what benefits is derived from any effort is proportional to the effort which is expended.

Had Donegal simply spent several hundred or thousand dollars to have the study made, the local people who are responsible for education on the local level would not have been involved and would not have seen the case with the same clarity.

As it has worked out, the local people have made the effort and now the local people see the big picture of Donegal district more clearly than ever before.

This study was required by the State Board and demands that 10 copies of the study be filed with the Commonwealth.

One local schoolman theorized that it will take a sizable room in which to store the copies of the reports as they flow in from the many school districts across the state.

He further wondered out loud just exactly what will become of the studies—what benefits or value they will be to anyone in Harrisburg.

It's possible the answer does not lie in Harrisburg at all. Perhaps the answer lies in the backhand benefit which Donegal may reap by getting itself involved in its own problems.

Too often people and organizations are so busy meeting the day-to-day problems that they do not have time, or the energy, to take a good, long hard look at "where we've been and where we're going."

This study, incidentally, is required to be updated every two years.

Perhaps this is a spot to emphasize that those people who believe that the schools are operated and controlled by the local school board just have not kept up with the way things are.

The mandate that school districts publish the long range study comes from the State Board of Education, which is just one of the agencies which has its hand deep in the control box of local schools.

Another is the state legislature itself. Although some control outside the local district could rightfully be expected from that source, the legislature now is exercising another influence.

For instance, it votes teacher salaries, special services, restrictions and other requirements without providing the funds. On an average, the state provides about 34 percent of the total cost of education in the Commonwealth. But, if it mandates higher costs and continues to pay about the same percentage, the added costs come from the taxpayers' pockets.

Operation of the school is not the way it was a few years ago when the school directors pretty much had the responsibility of local education.

But, be that as it may, Donegal has done what was required. The district filed its 10 copies and there is every reason to suppose that it will update its work in about two years, as required.

But, the hope of the effort is that by getting involved in the problem, by looking the situation squarely in the face, those responsible for the study — teachers, administrative staff and board of education — see better their own problems and can move ahead with confidence to provide this area with better schools than our boys and girls.

seen in the summer skies at night is a fascinating blend of ancient mythology and modern science.

Other fascinating things at the Museum include art exhibits, a "Village Square" of quaint old shops and stores, a display of early Pennsylvania furniture, antique cars, horse drawn vehicles, bicycles and countless other objects.

The Museum itself is beautiful, somewhat in the grand fashion, and the long escalators between floors are a delight to all the children.

The "ups" and "downs" are side by side, and youngsters of all ages were having a wonderful time Sunday afternoon, riding them. They would ascend to a higher floor, step directly from the 'up' to the 'down' and continue their ride!

Another lovely sight not far from Mount Joy is the Rose Garden at Hershey. We can't mention it often enough.

Ten days ago we were there, and found it full of bloom, as usual! The roses were "between blooms," but there were still many blossoms. Prettiest right now, though, were the annuals — petunias of every color, and marigolds, both dwarf and tall. In addition there were cannas, cocks combs and many other gorgeous flowers. It was a sea of color!
