the present problems which plague the Farm Show.

Properly handled, the Farm Show could grow and grow. But, continued as it is, the winter and space-restricted event has passed its peak of maximum benefit.

If the Commonwealth spends money to further correct the space problem, it should think seriously of making a big, big change to add big, big advantages.

experiences which I have been privileged to have. I am convinced that the keys to success can be found in four basic commitments which I am thankful were somehow implanted in my heart. They have been guiding principles in my life, and I am happy to recommend them to all young people who are attempting to find a productive and satisfying way of life.

The first of these commitments is to get a good education. The future belongs to those who are trained to conquer it. Even after I was singing on the Arthur Godfrey program, I insisted on graduating from Columbia University; for I am convinced that education is the one achievement which cannot be taken from us. I have seen young people who decided that education was not worth the effort, but who found to their sorrow that the immediate goal which they chose was shortsighted indeed.

The second basic commitment which I believe is essential is live by the rules! It does not matter whether we are talking about rules of home, of the state and nation, or of the employer; success always grows out of a willingness to accept a situation as it is and live in terms of it. I have always been enthusiastic about sports and learned years ago that if you are going to play the game, it must be played according to the rules. Rebellion may sound fine, but it has little to offer in terms of productive and successful living.

The third commitment which I would recommend to any young person is be happy! Many of the people I know spend so much time griping and complaining about their lot in life that they miss completely the joy of friendship, and the thrill of each day's experiences. Those who deny themselves happiness miss the greatest thrill which can be found.

The final commitment which I believe to be essential for successful living is live for eternity. We are not on this earth to stay, and there is a life which must be experienced on the other side of death. To suppose that all we have to deal with is material and physical is to miss the thrilling truth that we are linked with eternity. I am convinced that the application of these principles will make life rich and rewarding for any person.

Mount Joy, according to figures released recently, ranks near the top among the industrial producers of Lancaster county.

After Lancaster, Mt. Joy is the fifth best producer in the area. And, that's not bad considering such factors as Ephrata's size and New Holland's huge machine works.

What ranks Mount Joy so high?

In recent years the borough has had a booming growth of industrial activity.

Consider, for instance, that NCR has sales of $9 million.

Consider, too, a payroll of $1½ million.
