Rotarians Hear Of Messiah Home

A close-up look at the management of the Messiah Children's home was given Mount Joy Rotarians Tuesday noon at their weekly luncheon meeting, held at Hostetters, by Elwood Buckwalter.

As house father and administrator of the home, he told about the operation, the guidance given the children and talked about some of the problems.

The home, presently, he said, has 14 boys and girls. Nineteen is the capacity.

The youngsters mostly are from Lancaster, from the seventh ward district, from homes which have offered little of advantage to the children, he said.

"Ninety percent of the cases we have are a result of alcohol" Buckwalter indicated. Some come from families which at one time afforded opportunities but for one cause or another drifted to a breakup of the home.

The speaker, who with his wife, head a small staff which operates the home, said that it is the aim to offer a home-like situation for the children. Probably the hardest part of the job is to set guidelines and limits for youngsters who have probably never had any in their own homes, he said. The problem is to overcome the child's past.

The speaker was introduced and the program arranged by Al Newlin.

The Easter Seal Society of Lancaster county is one of this area's oldest rehabilitative agencies consistently supported by local residents. Contributions to Easter Seals go to help the handicapped of Lancaster county.

Over The Back Fence

By Max Smith

SPRING clean-up time is here when many property owners will be improving the appearance of the place and burning some of the trash. (Providing regulations permit.) Along with this activity come fires that will get out of control and do damage to life and property; this should not happen if the person responsible is careful and remains at the scene until the fire is completely extinguished. On farms many fires are started too close to buildings and if there is a change in wind direction, some of the buildings are threatened. It takes only a tiny spark coming in contact with dry matter to start a blazing fire. Burn trash carefully at all times with plenty of supervision and assistance, if needed.

EASTER gifts such as ducklings, chicks, and baby rabbits are very popular and quickly win the attention of all members of the family. However, most of these little creatures are very fragile and cannot stand much handling and cuddling. They need a constant warm temperature, clean, and free of drafts. Some Easter pets may be dangerous for little children who are still in the hand to mouth stage; they may carry salmonella or other organisms which may cause serious intestinal trouble. Families with such pets at this time are urged to give the proper attention and promote the policy of "look — don't touch". If the pets are handled by small children, be sure they wash their hands thoroughly afterwards.

THE 1970 growing season is at hand and many purchases of farm and garden supplies will be made in the coming weeks. All folks are urged to be careful with whom the dealing is done because we are all looking for bargains, and many so called "bargains" turn out to be very disappointing and expensive. To deal with strangers who are offering goods at reduced prices is risky because they may be misrepresenting and will not be here to give any service or adjustments. Local folks are urged to deal with reliable persons having a good reputation and ones who will stand behind their material at all times. The good businessman is not only interested in making a living but wants and must have satisfied customers. The stranger in the capacity of a traveling salesman with the "bargain" offer may be only interested in getting your money.

THE GRAZING season is at hand and many livestock producers will be turning their livestock to the pasture to enjoy the lush grass. Farmers are warned of the danger of scouring or bloating, if the animals are not given a feeding of dry matter such as hay, straw, or silage before they go to the pasture. They should have this dry matter for at least the first week of the new grazing season; also, the time that the animals are allowed on the grass should be limited at first (half-hour) and then gradually increased. Dairy men with the milking herd should permit grazing only after the milking period and keep them from the pasture for at least 4 to 5 hours before the next milking. Careful herd and flock management is required at the beginning of this pasture season.

Orientation At Donegal

Something new in orientation for boys and girls who will be freshmen at Donegal high school next fall is being used this spring.
