

"It's Mine!---It's Mine!"

EDITORIALS ---

One of the reasons Mount Joy is a good town in which to live is because the citizens of this community believe that this is a good place to live and are willing to keep everlastingly picking at the details to see that it stays that way.

In the public press this past week, wide attention was called to weeds, bugs and signs — all represented to be detrimental to the best image of Mount Joy.

Not any one complaint was big and at least one has been eliminated already this week. But, if a community is satisfied to sit back and let the little things pile up and pile up, it is not long before the entire community begins to suffer.

Mount Joy is a community of home owners who have a pride in their properties. They take personal satisfaction in keeping their buildings painted up, fixed up and shaped up.

The town this summer is a veritable kaleidoscope of color, with flowers of all kinds making virtually every home a special spot which blooms under the loving care of someone.

One of the things which makes Mt. Joy a special place is the fact that there are very very few homes which are of "slum" description.

If by some magical wave of a wand as many as a dozen specific houses could be eliminated, the community would be practically free of sub-marginal housing.

Mount Joy and its residents are proud of their town and by constantly chipping away at the minor problems of the community are able to maintain a high level of appearance and excellence.

Others are saying ---

The art of deception is entertaining when performed by magicians. A baseball pitcher throws his fastball, curve and change-up with the same motion in order to deceive the batter. The T-quarterback pretends to hand off the football to each of several running backs so as to confuse and mislead the defense. The basketball player fakes a shot hoping to draw the defensive player off balance so he can dribble around him. The magician cleverly entices his audience into watching the wrong action while the coup de grace occurs unobserved. Unfortunately, the use of deception is not limited to the field of entertainment. For there are despicable persons who often dupe unsuspecting victims out of their life savings. Many examples could be cited every day from the nation's newspapers.

There is a far more dangerous game of deception going on in our country, however, which not only threatens our life savings but our freedom as well.

One of the cleverest deceptive temptations ever developed is the federal grant-in-aid matching funds scheme, whereby the federal government encourages a perfectly normal and healthy community to desire an improvement of some sort for which it would rather not pay. For example, an expressway, a recreation, a new water system, an addition to the hospital, urban renewal — the list is endless, and the community is enticed to ask for federal money to pay a large part of the cost of the project. The civic leaders are urged to get their share for their community or others will consume it instead.

The federal - air modus operandi is skillfully deceptive in covering up its true objectives.

It corrupts the opposition. How can one develop a better bit of strategy than to trick the star pitcher of the opposing team into pitching against his teammates. This scheme does just that, for it is directed at the civic leaders of the community — not only those who sincerely want to see their city progress but often those who are the outspoken advocates of free enterprise. It is a sorry picture when the leading citizens, normally a sound individualistic-thinking champion of freedom, falls for the federal grant scheme. He is corrupted quite effectively and his usefulness to the cause of free enterprise is not only lost to his ball team in the one case involved, but in all future opportunities to speak up for freedom. Can a man be an effective leader for honesty if he has dipped his hand into the cash till of his company? Can a man attract followers to the cause of fidelity if he is known to have been unfaithful to his wife? And so it is with the civic leader, the spokesman on behalf of free enterprise and limited government, who is never as effective in his support of the freedom cause after he has been seduced by "gifts" from Washington.

It undermines self-reliance. There is no better way to bring about failure of a third-grade arithmetic student than by doing his homework for him. There is no better way to lose the strength of healthy legs than by the continual use of crutches. To learn how to conquer adversity, one must meet it. Local pride of community accomplishment surely does not follow in the wake of a successful begging jaunt to Washington.

We lose faith in ourselves to do what must be done by ourselves. Instead, we begin to believe there is an endless treasure in Washington — the political magician makes us see what he wants us to see. There is no such thing as Federal Funds — the only money the Federal Government has is money which it has taken from — you — out of your pocket.

Over The Back Fence

By Max Smith

FARM and Home Safety Week is set for July 19 to 25; this should be a time when we review the many hazards about the home and the farm and attempt to remove them before they cause an injury. There are so many causes of accidents that it is not practical to cover them all; however, farm machinery is connected with many accidents; it's not the fault of the machinery in most cases but the fault of the man operating the equipment. Haste & carelessness are often responsible. Parents and farm operators are urged to review safety measures and practices with their children and employees during Safety Week in order to prevent possible injury. It will be much more worthwhile if this is done before a serious accident, rather than afterwards.

ALL SWINE producers have a responsibility of promptly reporting any sick hogs to the local veterinarian. Due to the presence of this deadly disease in a neighboring county, the local swine industry faces a serious threat and it will take the support of everyone to keep this infection out of Pennsylvania. If infection is present, the quicker it is diagnosed and eliminated the
