> This is not the first time council has found itself in a depressed situation. Only weeks before the '70

Memorial Day, there was not even a chairman for the staging of the parade.

At that time, responding to an eleventh-hour call, Nauman himself accepted the leadership and with the help of loyal community workers staged the annual event.

Laying New Pressure Sewer

Laying of the new sewer line from the east Main street pumping station of the Mount Joy sewer system is nearly completed.

The new 12-inch cart iron line, which is being built to relieve an original 8-inch pipe, crosses under Main street at the pump station, runs west to Longenecker road, south along that roadway and then cuts diagonally through an open field and finally empties into the main gravity sewers on south Jacob street.

Pumping and valving systems are being installed in such a way that the old line can be used when and if needed.

The entire north side of town, plus the Florin area is all served through the East Main street lift station.

Because of the difference of elevations, sewage must be pumped under pressure thru the cast iron lines, up and over the hill until it again can be handled by gravity to reach the sewage plant.
