3. Bigger and more complex institutions,
4. More affluence,
5. More automation and technology,
6. Enlargement of Hedonism,
7. More unsolvable problems,
8. Loss of personal surface distinctions,
9. Control of individuality by mass media,
10. Knowledge explosion, and
11. More mental illness and maladjustments.

How will they add up to influence our way of life? There will be more intense but short personal relationships with random arrangements; more surface knowledge; more intense searching for "beautiful experience", but few finding them; youth becoming more passive; youth more idealistic but realizing that they do not have the power to change the world; more drugs, alcohol; violence for the sake of violence and confrontation; loss of "Protestant ethic"; more vandalism; more disregard for private property; more sexuality.

Frightening to the middle-age, middle-class Americans?

But it was the sincere observation and prediction of a knowledgeable public school man to a large group of adult middle class men. Were they stunned? No, probably not much.

What's wrong with Mount Joy?

One of the community's newer residents this week stopped in at the Bulletin office to say that he does not see too many things wrong.

In fact, he thinks this as an unusually nice town and it is his observation that a little more cooperation to accomplish some few things, thru established channels, is what is needed.

We agree!
There isn't too much wrong with Mt. Joy. In fact, there are a lot of things which are very right. The emphasis needs to be on making "a good town better!"

Someone pointed out this week that the new governor of the Commonwealth seems to be catching on fast to the ways of politics. When he speaks of cutting expenses he touches the two most sensitive nerves in the body of the citizenry. He speaks of cutting school funds and welfare.

How better can he probe for more taxes?

It sounds out of place this week, of course, but this winter, thus far, has not been as cold as usual. And, there is a system of measuring called "degree days" to prove the fact.

Oil companies, particularly, are interested in degree days, for it tells them a great deal about how to meet their delivery commitments.

The facts of this winter are that less fuel is being burned than usual. Now, if you, as a consumer, measure fuel in dollars spent, you might wonder. But, it is likely that an increased price of fuel may have eaten up the gain made by favorable weather.

Just for the record, about now we are approximately 500 degree days better off than a year ago.

Truly it is a collector's item!

Another interesting book which we scanned briefly was "Sundial of the Seasons," written by Hal Borland, long-time columnist on the New York Times.

It is a collection of 365 little "nature" gems, one for each day of the calendar year and appropriate to the time and the season.

We think we would like a copy of our own!

And while we're in a "bookish" vein, we can't resist suggesting that an all-time best seller, H. G. Wells' "Outline of History" makes mighty fascinating reading!

We've been almost a year reading it, ten pages a day when we could find the time. But now we are almost finished, and it has been a richly rewarding experience.

There's no other book which we know of that gives such a comprehensive picture of "the whole story of man." And it throws light in many places on happenings in our world today.

Its 962 pages are eminently worth while!
