poisoning myself to death."

Young wasn't cured overnight. "I didn't myself, over a long period just by coming back again and again to that moment when you know that if you don't stop a chronic cold it's going to turn into pneumonia," he concludes. "It was an immensely slow, difficult process, but after slipping back again and again, I at last made a kind of giant step and I was across the threshold to sanity and health."

"I've been sick all my life with fear," says Robt. Young in a Pageant Magazine interview. "As far back as I can remember, I was afraid. Of some imagined disaster that never did eventuate."

Young, known for years as the paternal Jim Anderson of "Father Knows Best" tells how he used to hide in the crooks of trees, when he was a child, just to be alone.

"When I became an actor," he continues, "I constantly felt I wasn't worthy, that I had no right to be a star. All those years at Metro, and even later on "Father Knows Best", I hid a black terror behind a cheerful face."

His insecurity brought on blinding psychosomatic headaches, and he tried to find a way out. "Alcoholism was the inevitable result," Young confides in the magazine interview. "It took me more than thirty years to realize I was
