BABY DOESN'T NEED ABSOLUTE QUIET

Bringing a baby into the home naturally will disrupt household routine somewhat. But it isn't necessary to rearrange family members' habits. James Van Horn, Extension family life specialist at Penn State says the normal clash of activities & personalities in a busy household is far more interesting to a baby than a silent, tomb-like atmosphere. Actually, a little noise and turmoil will probably prepare him better for life in the outside world.

ist at Penn State says the normal clash of activities & personalities in a busy household is far more interesting to a baby than a silent, tomb-like atmosphere. Actually, a little noise and turmoil will probably prepare him better for life in the outside world.

And it's not necessary to keep everyone on tiptoes when ever the baby is napping. Once he's asleep, a baby isn't disturbed by general noises. But loud shouts and sharp noises near his crib may wake him.

A WIDE RANGE OF POSSIBILITIES

Many nurseries stock several small flowering shrubs during the fall, says J. Robt. Nuss, Extension ornamental horticulturist at Penn State. These can sometimes be used to replace difficult flower beds. If garden space is limited, fall blooming varieties may be available.

LOOK FOR THE UL SYMBOL

On the market now are many electric appliances large and small, that have been manufactured in foreign countries. Few of these imports carry the UL symbol guaranteeing the item has met rigid safety tests. Extension home management specialists at Penn State say you shouldn't assume a product is UL approved—look for the familiar seal, the letters UL inside a circle.

DAIRY COWS NEED PROTECTION

Dairy cows should be kept in the barn on cold fall nites. Udders chilled on the ground are prone to mastitis, reminds Dr. Samuel B. Guss, Extension veterinarian at the Penn State university.

SHOES HELP PREVENT INJURIES

Despite protests, children should be made to wear shoes when they go outside to play. Sturdy shoes protect busy feet from broken glass, rocks or rusty nails. Thick, rubber-soled shoes provide good grip for climbing and running.
