HUNTERS SHOULD MAKE THEIR PRESENCE KNOWN

Hunters who make their presence known to other hunters may be saving their own lives, the Game Commission says.

Every year someone is shot in mistake for game, but a number of precautions can be taken by potential victims to avert tragedy. If a hunter knows that another sportsman is in the vicinity, he is apt to be a little more cautious, a little more hesitant to shoot, a little more concerned that another person is not in the line of fire.

Perhaps the hunter makes his presence known with a friendly, spoken greeting, or a noisy exchange should it be necessary. Possibly a discreet cough will suffice. At any rate, there should be some communication. A rustle in the leaves or brush cannot be recommended, since game can be expected to do this normally, too.

Some archers learn to camouflage attire for deer hunting, but they should be aware of the dangers involved. The warm weather has produced fall woodchuck hunting opportunities this year, and with migratory bird seasons in progress and the early small game season already having opened, an archer can now expect to encounter a number of gunners.

While the burden is always on the shooter to make sure of his target before he fires, hunters who take some sensible precautions can avoid becoming likely targets.

Always keep ammonia and bleach tucked away on high shelves. (And in case of an accident, the first thing you should do is to flush the exposed skin with plenty of cold water).

LAY PLANS NOW FOR A BIGGER NEST EGG

SAVE A LITTLE SOMETHING EVERY PAYDAY

You'll be amazed how fast those painless amounts will grow into substantial savings — up to several extra "paychecks" per year. If you do it regularly, you hardly know the difference . . . until the day your nest egg is a necessity. For unexpected bills or taxes . . . education . . . to take advantage of a special bargain . . . or to treat the family to a first-class vacation. Then, you'll find a pleasant bonus, too: the generous interest we pay on every dollar you save.

So, start saving soon . . . and often . . . and watch your nest egg grow!
