Washington Report

Despite many questions about it and criticisms of it, the wage-price freeze has proved effective. Congress did not make it work, the President did not make it work, but the American people did. Their cooperative efforts made the difference in stabilizing prices, restoring consumer confidence and strengthening the economy.

Evidence of this effectiveness has begun to come in and should be of interest to everyone. The evidence shows that everyone's sacrifices have resulted in everyone benefiting from an upturn in prosperity and a downturn in inflation.

In the area of prices the trend was definitely toward less inflation. The Wholesale Price Index, which is one of the prime devices for measuring the inflationary picture, dropped in both September & October and preliminary estimates are that November figures are down too. Of 3885 prices covered in a special Department of Commerce survey of the wage-price freeze, 87 percent showed no change in price from August to September. And the rate of inflation as measured through use of the Gross National Product (the sum total of all the Nation's wealth) has been dropping steadily.

In the meantime, consumer confidence was on the rise. The Sindlinger Consumer Confidence Index has been going up ever since the freeze got underway. There was a ten-point jump between the start of the freeze and mid-November. In addition a survey of plant and equipment spending of seven percent which is the first real-increase in this area since 1969. One of the bleakest outlooks, according to some reports, is in the employment field. Yet, the statistics show some encouraging trends. Even though the unemployment rate has been too high, total employment has been increasing. In other words, there are more people in jobs than ever before in our history even with the six percent unemployment rate. Most important, the people in the jobs tend to be married men with families to support. Only three percent of these men were unemployed as of last month—the lowest figure in a year.

Other bright signs on the economy front are the expansion of retail sales, the increase of housing starts and the big jump in automobile sales. Retail sales for October this year ran close to 12 percent above October, 1970. The rate of housing starts in the first ten months of 1971 is higher than the annual rate of any year in history, and that also means more sales of consumer goods like furniture and appliances. Automobile purchases reached an all-time high in October with more than a million new cars sold.

This is the record of a successful program in which we have all played a part. It suggests that we are on the road toward the goal of prosperity with peace, without inflation.

Consider gifts which will develop a child's interest and concern for his environment, such as outdoor gardening kits, bird feeders, ant farms, children's nature publications, a tree to plant, a household plant to care for, or environmental games now on the market. Environmental survival is everyone's concern and the more we know about it, the better we can do the job.

The Holiday season is hectic enough as it is, so do not rush when behind the wheel. Fast driving may get you there in time—or it may not get you there at all.

Wisdom is the art of proportion.
