RESEARCH PRIORITIES STATED FOR RURAL HEALTH SERVICES

Health services for rural areas need high priority research in four aspects — organization, manpower, utilization, and financing — declared Dr. Charles O. Crawford, of Penn State, recently at a National Workshop on Community Services in Lincoln, Nebraska.

to lack coordination and integration in the more rural areas of the country, Dr. Crawford observed. He suggested that a "three tier system," now being advanced in many circles, be studied further for adaption to rural areas.

The "three tiers," he said, are first level care in physicians' offices, clinics, and local health centers, secondary care including community hospitals, and the third area of sophisticated medical centers. Dr. Crawford spoke as associate professor of rural sociology at Penn State.

Rural areas need greater use of physicians' assistants, nurses, and similar types of support personnel, he pointed out. Manpower studies should
