Pewter Placed On Exhibition

Seventeen pieces of beautifully-crafted "communion service" pewter, including a complete set by the famous Johan Christopher Heyne, of Lancaster (1754-1780), currently are on special exhibit in the William Penn Memorial Museum in Harrisburg.

The renowned Philadelphia pewterer, William Will (1764-1798), also is represented by two outstanding pieces — a flagon and a chalice — from an early Pennsylvania congregation's communion service. Balance of the exhibit, mounted in wall cases in the ground floor foyer of the Museum's Fine Arts Galleries, consists of miscellaneous individual pieces from liturgical-use sets long since "braken up."

By putting these examples of historic eucharistic vessels on display, Eric de Jonge, Chief Curator of the State Museum — and one of the nation's foremost experts on American pewter — hopes to call attention to a deplorable situation; namely, that Pennsylvania is fast losing many of the better specimens of these native artifacts.

Through indiscriminate sale, says Curator de Jonge, they are leaving the Commonwealth to become treasured parts of out-of-State private & museum collections.

The complete Johan Christopher Heyne service now on display in the Museum is one of the great Lancaster pewterer's finer creations, and was commissioned for the historic Hill church, in Cleona, Lebanon county, where it was in use for many generations.

Also, showing evidence of long use, but still in perfect condition, are the pair of pieces by William Will, and a large, covered chalice made by an unidentified Pennsyl-
