ED ESHLEMAN'S WASHINGTON REPORT

Anyone who uses our Nation's rivers, streams and lakes recognizes the need for strong and effective water pollution control. Very recently the House of Representatives passed legislation to meet that need. If the legislation becomes law, it will be the most comprehensive and far reaching measure ever to clear Congress for the purpose of restoring and enhancing the quality of our waterways and to insure their future as a lasting national asset.

But there is doubt in many minds around Capitol Hill about whether the President will get such a water quality bill for his signature this year. The problem stems from the fact that the Senate also has passed a bill to control water pollution and the Senate legislation is very different from that of the House. It is up to a conference committee to resolve the differences, but many people seem to feel that the committee is faced with an impossible task.

There would be hope of compromising the two versions of the legislation if there were not a fundamental difference between them. That basic clash is between idealism and realism.

The House bill is a realistic approach to the water pollution problem. In other words, it authorizes the spending of Federal funds in a variety of ways to improve water quality, and it sets goals for the kind of quality standards to be obtained. But it does not set impossible standards. It recognizes that to conquer the problem we will need the cooperation of industries, municipalities and, above all, individuals.

The more idealistic approach to water quality would substitute coercion for cooperation. It would force business, local governments and others to meet goals that only the most ardent conservationists feel are practical. And it would ask them to do so with less Federal money. Essentially that is the Senate version.

The bleak outlook for compromise between these two approaches was obvious when the House passed its water bill. At that time several amendments were offered that would have brought the House legislation more in line with the Senate bill. Each of those amendments was rejected, most by wide margins.

Some of the amendments I personally supported where I felt the language would strengthen the bill without making it unrealistic. But because they failed, it should not be assumed that the House water bill is an anti-conservationist approach. Its devotion to realism may produce that which all people concerned about the environment want most — action.

All of us who have studied our environmental problems have become concerned about mankind's chances for survival. To do nothing about cleaning up our air and water would be disastrous. To do the wrong thing could be just as disastrous. But to assume that something must be done does not mean that there is only one right way of dealing with pollution crisis. Based on the facts I've seen, I believe that the House quality bill is the best way to clean up the Nation's waterways—not the only way, but the best way.

ANNUAL BANQUET

The annual Legislative dinner, cosponsored by the Lancaster County Women's Christian Temperance Union and the Lancaster County Men's Christian Citizens League, will be held at the Hostetter banquet Hall, on Thursday, April 20, at 6:30 p.m.

The speaker for the occasion will be Judge Raymond K. Berg from Chicago. While serving as supervising judge, Traffic Court, Chicago, he was more successful than any other person in the county in reducing traffic accidents caused by drunken drivers.

We're always a little suspicious of those who assure us that they want nothing.

★ PROCLAMATION ★

Governor Milton J. Shapp has proclaimed Saturday, April 15 as "Home Rule" Local Government Day. We, at United Telephone, support and endorse the Governor's Proclamation.

The Proclamation is especially timely since your state General Assembly just passed a constitutional amendment making home rule powers available to both local municipalities and county governments.

As good citizens, everyone should resolve to become more interested and involved in local government which provides many vital day-to-day services.

As society becomes more complex, the responsibility of our elected officials becomes equally complex.

The added responsibility, opportunities and potential of "Home Rule" will challenge local officials to use creative, dynamic and modern techniques.

Everyone can help our local government by being interested, concerned and understanding.
