More Fashions
For Stout Women

Rudi Gernreich, Bob Mackie, Boyd Clifton and a number of other prominent fashion designers agree that all the old taboos concerning fashions for the stout woman are now invalid.

Quoted in Coronet magazine, Gernreich says, "The general rule used to be dark clothes, but I believe lighter clothes should be worn because they make you feel better."

Mackie, in attacking the prejudice against prints for big women, says, "There are many prints available today, particularly in geometric patterns, that appear basically vertical. These can be very flattering to a heavy figure."

Clifton agrees with Gernreich that if an overweight woman wants to dress for fun, then she should, no matter how way-out a fashion might be. He cautions, "Overweight women must pay attention to fabrics. Stiff fabrics look bulky. Soft, printed fabrics make even the heaviest woman look feminine and attractive."

In conclusion, a number of department store buyers indicate in the Coronet article that the change in fashion approach for the hefty is real, not just theoretical.

"We have encouraged designers to be more adventurous with fashions for heavier women and our sources are now coming up with a larger and more varied selection of clothes. Big may not be beautiful, but it needn't be frumpy any more."

INSIGHT

We all have problems, but if we keep having the same kind of problem, the need for new insight is indicated. Some people can't get along with their co-workers, some have health problems, others are always broke. If you seem to have the same type of problem continually, look for the new insight that will reveal the cause. Ask yourself "What am I doing to invite this? How can I change my way of thinking and avoid having to meet the same challenges so many times?" Solve the inner problem, and you will then stop meeting the outer problem again and again. All that is required is fresh insight.
