TRADITION

Before we reject any tradition, we should examine the reason it became a tradition in the first place. At Christmas time we become involved in trimming the Christmas tree, giving gifts, mailing cards, or preparing for festive celebrations. We may sometimes become pushed to the point where we feel like saying, "I give up! It's too much! It isn't worth it!" Let's take a good look at the meanings behind these traditions:
When we consider love, peace, good will, and the sheer joy of doing things for others and being with those we love we may say, "Yes, it's work, but it's worth it!"

ACCEPTANCE

How wonderful it would be if we could accept ourself and others as we accept nature!
We don't expect a palm tree to look like an elm, or a sunflower to look like a rose. To be fully accepted by everyone may be an unattainable goal. But it is a wonderful feeling to find someone with whom we can honestly discuss our inmost feelings, knowing we are still accepted. To find this kind of acceptance, however, we must learn to be willing to give it in return. I can be me only if I'm willing to let you be you!

OPEN

None of us wants to live his life in a private room, closing out the rest of the world. It is the openhearted, openmind-ed person who sees life as a real adventure. The person who is open to new experiences and sees them as a part of the growing process does not face life with fear, but rather with anticipation. When we are open to life, we see the potentiality for good in others and in ourself, and love to watch it unfold. Nothing is gained by traveling through life in a covered wagon.

MASSAGE PARLORS

A recent study disclosed 90 percent of massage parlors in California engaged in illicit activities.

Lead arsenate sprays and dusts have been used in orchards and fields in the United States for more than 75 years.
