HELP CHILD TO DEVELOP INDEPENDENCE
By the age of three your child will be ready to socialize—his first step toward independence.
James Van Horn, Extension family life specialist at Penn State university, emphasizes the importance of giving support to your child when he needs it. This includes introducing a child to new things, new people and new situations when it makes him comfortable and seems natural.
You can help by encouraging your child to play away from you—in another room or outside. This play need not always be with other children, he may enjoy playing with animals or toys.
Between the ages of 3 and four your child may want to visit family or friends away from home. He should soon learn that he can have fun with other people while being away from you for several hours at a time.
If this stage of development is successful, your child will be able to adjust to nursery or elementary school with few problems in socialization.

When your child becomes independent, points out Van Horn he can be separated from you without feeling insecure because he knows your love exists—even when you are not physically present.

FARM MACHINERY
RUSTS RAPIDLY
Extension agricultural engineers at Penn State university remind farmers that farm machines rust rapidly when neglected. It is good practice to treat all equipment with a rust preventive on frictioning parts when the machines are not in use.

The Algonquian Indians were the first to use the toboggan, not for pleasure, but for carrying their loads of food and supplies through the wintry woods.

The bird Titmouse lines its nest with hair it snatches from squirrel's tails, and has even been known to hug hair firmly attached to human heads.

The expression "in the doldrums" was named for equatorial ocean regions noted for dead calms and light, fluctuating winds.
