NEW PROCESS
STABILIZES
WOOL FABRIS

Home seamstresses who find the process of shrinking woollens before sewing a nuisance, will soon find that problem eliminated.

Mrs. Ruth Ann Wilson, Extension clothing specialist at Penn State, reports that the textile industry has developed a process to stabilize wool and wool-blend fabrics to a residual shrinkage of 1/2 to 1%.

The traditional cold-water shrinking and steam-sponging techniques usually applied to woollens and worsteds result in a possible 3 to 4 percent shrinkage.

Unlike some previous stabilization processes, the new technique does not affect the hand of the fabric.

Mrs. Wilson explains that the process—yet to be named—involves spraying the fabric with a specially developed resin. In addition to decreasing the shrinkage, the process

CONTROL YOUR HEATING BILL

The U.S. Department of Agriculture reports that as much as 30 percent of your family's heating bill is caused by the warm air leakage or the cold air infiltration. To seal out the howling wind, the USDA suggests storm windows made with double-pane insulating glass. Or use weather stripping at movable joints and caulk the frames of all windows and doors.

COMPETITION

There are some who are good competitors and love to compete with others. There are also some who find it difficult, and others who almost refuse to compete at all. It is often helpful to compete with oneself and our past performance. This means not only to give our best, but to attempt to excel what has been our best in the past. This kind of competition requires concentration and discipline. There is a real joy in feeling a sense of accomplishment, but this feeling does not come through doing something reluctantly or with "half a heart."

You can't always tell a tree's age by counting the rings; there may be false rings caused by interruptions of water supply in the growing season, or from drought, frost, fire, or disease.

When people asked the eccentric ancient Greek philosopher Diogenes — as he knew they would—why he carried a lantern in broad daylight, he answered, "I am seeking an honest man."
