WHAT One Person CAN DO

HANNAH GINZBURG, WILDERNESS LOVER

How much is a river worth? It's hard to put a price on a river. But Hannah Ginzburg of Pasadena, Texas, knew that once you lose one, you'll never get it back.

So she took up the cause of saving 12-mile-long Middle Bayou, outside Houston, after the tragic death of her friend, Armand Yramategui, of the Texas Conservation Council.

Mr. Yramategui had been scheduled to testify before the Harris County Commission against turning the wilderness river into a storm sewer for home developers. Mrs. Ginzburg testified in his place.

She took on major opponents, including a large oil company. She also organized canoe trips downriver for newspaper reporters and television cameramen. They saw, and showed the public, the last wilderness tract in the area - a tangled thicket of trees, bushes and wild flowers that sheltered deer, alligators, turtles and herons. The clean waters teemed with crabs, shrimp, redfish and spotted trout.

Mrs. Ginzburg wrote articles in newsletters and magazines and penned guest editorials in weekly papers. After three years, Hannah Ginzburg, supported by an aroused public, got the federal government to help fund a survey and then purchase a 956-acre tract along the river. She was responsible for raising several million dollars to match the government
