

Pete Foley and the people youngest mayor in Lancaster County.

There are many local residents with highly developed skills - "educators, engineers, bankers, lawyers, doctors, Indian chiefs" - all of whom have much to contribute to their community.

There are former council members whose experience and wisdom can be brought to bear on contemporary problems.

Pete, himself, will be a "former council member" next year, but hopes that he will continue to contribute to the government of Mount Joy. He is leaving the council because of multiplying business responsibilities and because of a need to "regenerate himself." But he is leaving with a strong sense of satisfaction with his participation and leadership in local government.

One of his major objectives when he ran for and was elected to Council has been accomplished - to have a borough manager run the increasingly complex government of Mount Joy. First, George Ulrich and now Joe Bateman have brought needed efficiency to the operation of the borough.

Moreover, he has had the satisfaction of presiding over Council as its president, not as a powerful executive, but more like a conductor of an orchestra, helping to bring the best out of each member working with the others.

Some of the members of the Mount Joy Council are younger, some are older. They complement each other well, pulling together as a team.

In his remaining term in office this year Pete Foley's major concerns are improving the bridges in town, correcting the problems of surface water run-off, and updating zoning and building codes. The borough solicitor is negotiating with the Public Utilities Commission on the bridges. An extensive survey of the drainage area in and around the borough has been carried out with federal monies. A public hearing on zoning is scheduled.

When he has done all he can to solve these pressing problems, and when he will no longer be on Council next year - it is the Bulletin's opinion that Pete Foley will "regenerate" himself in basically three ways.

He will probably do more painting and sculpting. An artist as well as a public official and businessman, Pete believes that creativity can be expressed in the way people organize themselves to solve problems, as well as in the way an artist organizes colors and materials.

He will play more tennis and golf. He plays a good game on the courts and on the course.

He will spend more time with his family. Pete and his wife Ethel have three children: Ann, Mrs. John Gohn of Marietta; Lora Lee, a school teacher in Colorado Springs; and Emily Lou. They also have a granddaughter, Abbie.
