

Mayor

District.

Then, in the summer of 1973, when Al Newlin resigned as Republican candidate for Mayor of Mount Joy, Jim Gingrich was interested in running. The other committeemen supported him. He won an easy victory over Josephine Ellis, first woman to run for mayor in Mount Joy.

A different sort of mayor

Right from the start, he was a different sort of mayor. He was not only young, but he wanted to establish a close relation between the mayor and all the people of Mount Joy. He set up a monthly session called, "Talk to the Mayor," when he sat in Borough Hall, available to any citizen who wanted to come in and talk personally to him about any problem at all.

The "Talk to the Mayor" sessions, discontinued over the winter when few citizens braved the cold to speak to the mayor, will be resumed in the spring.

People should work with Police

Since the Mayor is responsible for enforcing the laws of the borough and is in charge of the police department, Jim is interested in establishing the best possible relations between the police force and the people of Mount Joy. He rides with the police cars regularly to keep in close touch with their work. He acts as public relations man for the police force with citizens. He wants to encourage people to cooperate fully with the force in helping with law enforcement.

Jim says that a good example of a citizen cooperating with the force was the action of Pete Stauffer, who noticed a side door open at Sloan's Pharmacy at 2 a.m. one night. Pete informed the police who apprehended two robbers in Sloan's before they could make off with any goods.

Doing something about the bridges

Another major activity of Jim's is getting the railroad bridges in Mount Joy improved. Jim, as mayor, acts as official representative of the borough in negotiations with Representative Brandt, Senator Manbeck, Pennsylvania D.O.T., P.U.C., and Penn Central Railroad.

myself. Mrs. Peraro said, "Don't panic." Needless to say, I didn't follow her directions. By the time for me to receive my award, I had brought myself under control. I simply decided to face the matter at hand straight on. Actually, I could have fainted, but I didn't. Later, someone said I looked very calm. Ha! Were they fooled.

Not until Mr. O'Brian made his speech did I realize that I was representing the entire body of youth in America. It made me proud and it still does.

Horse show plans made
