Telephone customer service is improved

United Telephone Company in Columbia has introduced a new system of keeping records that will greatly speed up calls from customers.

The new system starts with taking photographs of information from a computer displayed on a TV-like screen. The pictures are printed on tiny plastic sheets called "micro-fiche." ("Fiche" is a French word meaning "card." It is pronounced something like "fish.")

The printing process is ten times faster than a computer typewriter, and saves valuable computer time.

When customers call in, service representatives have all the information at their fingertips that they need for the customer.

One 4 by 6 inch "fiche" contains as much information as 538 pages of customer bills.

Another change at United Telephone will be to use larger sheets of paper for customers bills that list toll calls. Instead of several sheets, customer bills will now be on a single sheet, saving paper.
