After the war he attended Franklin and Marshall College, intending to go on to law school.

Coached champion team

But during the summers of 1948 and 1949 he took a job as playground supervisor and coached a midget baseball team. Mr. Hallgren's team went through the season undefeated in 1949 and won the championship. The experience of working with these young athletes had been so absorbing and satisfying, Hallgren decided to take a teaching job.

He went to Millersburg, Pa., where he taught social studies and also was coach of all the sports at the school. He became a licensed sports official for the PIAA, and only recently gave up officiating at sports while at Millersburg he also studied at Bucknell University and earned a master's degree in school administration and guidance.

In Millersburg he also met and then married Mary Elizabeth Daniels. They have three children: Mary Ann, Mrs. Stephen Mohr of Bainbridge; Betsy, a student at Michigan State University; and Barbara, a student at Donegal High School.

Returned to Donegal

In 1955 he returned to his home town as guidance counselor and history teacher at the new Donegal High School.

In 1960 he became assistant to the principal of the high school, and then in 1961 was made principal of the Donegal High School Annex, which has since become Beahm Junior High School.

In 1966 he was chosen as supervisory principal of the Donegal School District, and in 1970 became Superintendent.

In this steady advance to more and more executive responsibility in the school system, Mr. Hallgren has moved further and further away from satisfactions of working directly with young people that first attracted him to education as a profession.

He spends his days meeting with officials, reading reports, filling out forms, making broad decisions, and signing his name to documents. Frequently, his only direct contacts with students occur when they get into some kind of trouble, not the happiest contact between teacher and pupil.

Job is to make teaching easier

In the rather small building of the Washington School, where his office now is, there is one classroom of kindergarten children. The sight of those children as he passes their door, and the sounds of their voices trickling into his office, heartens Ragnar Hallgren, reminding him in the midst of his abstract administrative tasks of the essential nature of his business - the teaching of children.

Those children at Washington School help him keep in mind that his job is to make the jobs of teachers easier, to take care of all the administrative detail necessary for the operation of the school system, so that the teachers can do their best job of helping the children of Donegal to learn.

He even worked during his lunch hours, sometimes shoveling snow for someone, then hurrying back to school. Saturdays and summers he worked on Henry Heisey's farm and delivered ice.

Had to quit school

When he was in the ninth grade he had to quit school and go to work.

He got a job with Wallace and Fisher's tire store in Lancaster, and before long was expert in cutting grooves in re-tread tires.

His employers were impressed; it was only a couple years before they made young Pat manager of their store in Columbia.

Meanwhile, World War II had started and America entered the war. Pat enlisted, served overseas, and was discharged as a sergeant in December, 1945.

Studied nights

The war over, he came back to Marietta and took a job as aircraft receiver and checker at the Middletown Air Force Base. He also continued his education studying at nights with the American School. He earned a high school diploma, then went on to study accounting with La Salle Extension University, and leadership training with Pennsylvania State University Extension.

Another new interest was developing. He was spending more and more time with Lillie Fortune, a girl from Bainbridge he had known for a long time. In 1947 they were married. They have one son, Patrick Kenney, III.

Leader in Jaycees

As it turned out, a most important part of Pat's life began now. He joined the Marietta Jaycees, the first black Jaycee. It was in the Jaycees that Pat developed his talents for leadership and service. From the Jaycees he won awards for distinguished service. As External Vice-President of the Jaycees he got to know lots of people all over south central Pennsylvania.

After the Jaycees he joined the Marietta Lions. He became the first black president of the Lions. The list of other honors won by and offices held by Pat Kenney is too long to print.

In 1966 he took a position with the State Human Relations Commission, in which he covered 39 counties, checking on alleged cases of discrimination against people because of their ethnic or minority background.

In 1968 he became the first Executive Director of the Lancaster City-County Human Relations Committee.

Philosophy of human relations.

The outstanding local leader in the battle against discrimination, Pat Kenney as a black man personally knows what it feels like to be snubbed and rejected. But when it happened he never let it get him down.

He did not feel hurt and he did not hate the people who did it. He just kept on working and learning and seeing how he could be of service to other people.

BPW launches 'Women's Year'

The Business and Professional Women's Club of Mount Joy is participating in International Women's Year in Pennsylvania.

Governor Milton J. Shapp launched International Women's Year in Pennsylvania with these words:

"The nation will pay tribute to the major role women have played in the two hundred years of American history and the effort they will continue to make toward the economic growth, political effectiveness, social progress and educational development of this Commonwealth. I urge that both men and women of Pennsylvania join together to do all in their power with practical and constructive measures to make 1975 an outstanding year for the advancement of the status of women in Pennsylvania."

Some areas of greatest concern for women are: equality in law; economic rights; family responsibilities; decision-making at all political levels and access to health care.

Mrs. Betty S. Brown, Scranton, President of the Pennsylvania Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Inc., announced that the 225 clubs in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, representing 12,000 working women in Pennsylvania are planning I.W.Y. activities for the entire year. Among activities planned are the Women in Government Luncheon and Seminar entitled "The Emerging Woman" to be held at the Sheraton in Gettysburg on April 4 and 5. Guest speaker at the Luncheon "Honoring Women in Government" will be Patricia Lindh, Special Assistant to the President of the United States for Women. She will be accompanied by Karen R. Keesling, National Federation, Young Careerist Chairman, Director of Women's Programs for the President of the United States. Also, Honorable Patricia Crawford, 156th Legislative District will address the group. A highlight of the program is the recognition of all women in elected or appointed to "Policy Making Posts" on the local, county, state or national level.
