

Marietta Town Hall open Saturday, May 31

by Hazel Baker
 The Olde Town Hall Museum, Marietta, will be open in conjunction with the dedication of the Marietta Pioneer Fire Hall dedication on Saturday, May 31, from 12 to 5 p.m. The structure, which has three floors, was once the center for community activities. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lehbert, curators, contribute time and money in maintaining the 1847 structure which houses antiques and memorabilia of local color. A country store, Civil War relics, a library, a jail or dungeon, and the boro's early fire fighting equipment are among the interesting features on the first floor.

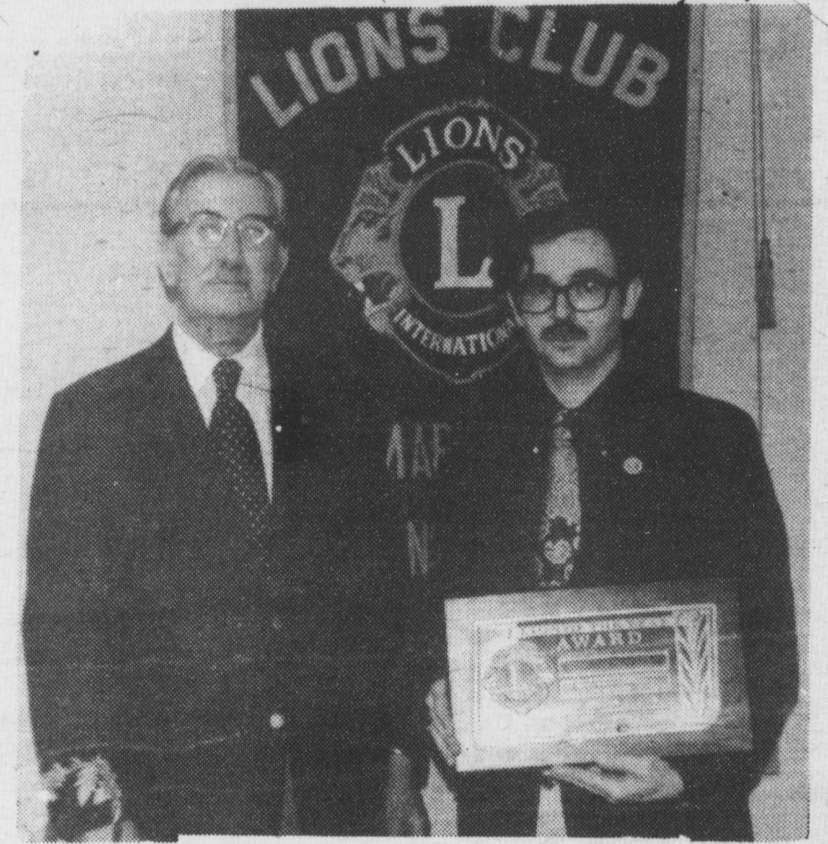

The town clock, which served as the town crier, has its weights on the first floor, while the cable reaches to the tower which houses the four faces.

On the second floor is a one room school. Desks, lunch boxes and school books are placed in the room. An organ in working condition adds to the atmosphere of the old school.

The third floor was once the meeting place for various lodges and fraternal organizations. Incomplete plans have been made which may include art exhibits or some other attraction appealing to the public for this floor.

Admission to the Marietta Olde Town Hall Museum is free.
