

Don't be too helpful to animals

Drawing by J. L. Biesecker

by J.L. Biesecker
Vacation time is now settling around us with the bright summer sun. For many of us vacation means time spent camping, hiking, fishing, hunting and other activities that have us outside enjoying and communing with nature. However, summer is far from being a time of vacation for mothers in the wild. It is a time of new life in the business-like scratching of little pheasants, the hectic rough-housing of fox kits, and the silent freezing of spotted fawn in the sun dappled woods.

Many and varied types of cute, cuddly babies abound in forest and field during this time of year. These little animals are important, important to their mother, to nature, and to the future of their species. Each year many thousands of baby wild animals are destroyed by uninformed children and unthinking adults who rescue what they thought were abandoned children of the wild.

Unlike human mothers, our wild sisters do not often abandon their children. They hide them from humans and other predators. Wild animals know where their youngsters are and will return for them, if people leave them undisturbed. Many kinds of animals cannot live long in captivity, dying a slow and unnecessary death. This death usually comes out of the ignorance of their captor. The cute baby animals that do manage to survive, normally grow into uncooperative, untrustworthy, nearly wild animals that are pale reflections of their free wild brothers.

Only a knowledgeable outdoorsman can determine if an animal is abandoned or in need of help. One must have an understanding of the habits and needs of wild animals to raise them successfully and humanely in captivity. Hunters, and other sportsmen who know and respect animals need to share their knowledge with others, encouraging them to help only those animals who need help, which isn't a bad principle to transfer from man's relationship with animals to man's relationship with man.

Help only those who need help, through an understanding that comes out of knowledge and respect. When we apply this idea to our activities, we will increase our enjoyment of the out-of doors, wild animals and life.

Well informed tour guides explain the many facets of brewing in the upper and lower levels of Lancaster County's oldest brewery. Giant vats are still in place within the Lagering Cellar. The fermented brew was placed in wooden casks in order to age for a period of 30 days before being drawn off into smaller kegs which were stored 43 feet below the street surface. Temperature remains around 50 degrees year around in the Catacombs.
