AUTUMN

by Chester Wittell

Autumn, the tidy house-wife, has a flair
 For orderly arrangement. June and May
 Are teen-age now; she puts their toys away.
 July's old sweatshirt on the the hanger there
 She cleans and closets with maternal care.
 The still-hot bowl of August's pipe of clay
 She racks and wipes the ashes from the tray,
 And drops the shades to blind the sunlight glare.

Too long the lure of green has irked her eye;
 It shall be changed. She heaves a wind-borne sigh;
 Shortens day's skirt and dyes the balding trees
 In brown, and getting down on hands and knees,
 And wrapping up September's equinox,
 Puts summer's weather into winter's box.
