Crankshaw photos in county show

The Lancaster County Bicentennial Photo Collection, exhibiting the work of county photographers, will feature two area landmarks, the Maytown pump and the Donegal Church. Submitted by David Crankshaw, Maytown, a senior at Donegal High School, they were chosen to be part of a 37 picture exhibit which has been shown at the Ellicott House, Lancaster, and will be available for showing throughout the year in banks, clubs, or institutions with exhibition space.

Jack W. W. Loose, president of the Lancaster Co. Historical Society and professional photographers George Russo and John Gates II made the selections from over 200 entries.

Subjects in the exhibition include places of historic interest, landscapes, leisure time occupations, religion and others. All photographs were taken in Lancaster County.

Mrs. John Wagner's art at library

Paintings by Mrs. John C. Wagner of Manheim are on display at the Mount Joy Library this month. Photo shows Mrs. Wagner's painting of a covered bridge.

Rheems ambulance gets meter

Lawrence, principal at Maytown, wants to talk to parents of pupils

If you're concerned about anything going on at Maytown Elementary School - pick up your phone, dial 426-3416, and ask for "Mr. Lawrence."

James D. Lawrence, who took over when former principal Eugene Saylor retired, wants to talk to the parents of his new pupils.

"The freer people feel to talk with the school and the freer the school feels to talk with the people—the better off we're all going to be," says Mr. Lawrence.

If parents discuss school problems only with each other or with their children, they are not helping the school to solve its problems. The way to correct a problem at the school is to call the principal, Mr. Lawrence.

Being a principal is nothing new to Mr. Lawrence, who as assistant principal at Riverview in Marietta, actively ran the school. (John Sauter, official principal at Riverview, is also Director of Elementary Education for the entire Donegal District, a full-time job in itself.)

Mr. Lawrence also is encouraging parents to attend parents' meetings at the school, to air their problems with other parents and teachers. While at Riverview, Mr. Lawrence was active in the PTO and organized a meeting at which the safety patrol explained their operations to parents.

Family, church, school - all these institutions serve children's needs, Mr. Lawrence points out.

Families can help their children learn if they cooperate with the schools. "If we don't have a working, cooperative relationship with parents," Mr. Lawrence says, "There's no way we can meet the needs of children."

So, if there's any problem your child has at Maytown Elementary—pick up your phone, dial 426-3416, and ask for "Mr. Lawrence."

If you prefer, you can send him a note, care of Maytown Elementary School.
