Eating Crow. A police inspector in Hartford, on being informed that a restaurateur in his batwick was serving game out of season, visits the restaurant in muff, and orders dinner. "Waiter," says he, "can you give me a salmi of partridge?"

"Certainly, sir," replies the waiter very promptly, and yells to the cook, "Partridge for one."

The inspector finishes his dinner leisurely, and then says to the waiter, "Ask the boss to step this way a minute."

"What for?" "I wish to notify him to appear in court to-morrow, and answer for selling partridge out of season."

"O, I guess it ain't worth while bothering him about that."

"Do as I tell you, I am the police inspector, and have secured the necessary evidence against him."

"O I spotted you, and guessed what you were after. It wasn't partridge you had."

Police inspector (uneasily)—"What was it then?"

Waiter (cheerfully)—"Crow!"

Soon after the Copernican system of astronomy began to be generally understood, an old farmer went to his parson with the following inquiry: "Dr. T., do you believe in the new story they tell about the earth moving around the sun?" "Yes, certainly."

"Do you think it is according to the Scriptures? If it's true, how could Joshua command the sun to stand still?"

"Umph!" quoth the parson; "Joshua commanded the sun to stand still, did he?" "Yes." "Well, it stood still, did it not?" "Yes." "Very well. Did you ever hear that he set it a going again?"

Conversation near the marriage license clerk's desk, between a clergyman, who had come to make a marriage return, and a middle-aged man waiting to see one of the clerks. Clergyman:

"Good morning, my friend; where is that pair of boots you promised to make me instead of the fee which you had not the money to pay when I married you?"

"Oh, I'll make them the first chance I get; but I'll make two pairs if you'll unmarry me again."

A good story is told of a scapegrace whom a mentor reminded that his aunt had paid his debts, and that he should be more submissive to the wishes of his relative. The young good-for-nothing did not take much heed of the sermon; but when his creditors were mentioned, he had a real grievance: "Yes! yes!" he allowed coolly, "my aunt paid my creditors; but what has she done for me?"

At a late military dinner, one of the visitors proposed a toast: "May the man who has lost one eye in the service of his country, never see distress with the other." But the person whose duty it was to read the toast, by omitting the word distress completely changed the sentiment and caused much merriment by the blunder.

A dandy, leading a dog by a string, lounged up to a ticket-office window of a railway station, and inquired: "Must I—aw—take a ticket for a puppy?" He was naturally both surprised and annoyed when ticket-feller answered, after a moment's reflection: "No, you can travel as an ordinary passenger."

Owen Moore Was owing more Than Owen Moore could pay; So owain more, Caused Owen Moore To up and run away.

This was owain' to Owen's owain' more than he owned.

Daniel Webster once affirmed in company that no woman ever wrote a letter without a postscript. "My next letter shall refute you!" said a lady of his acquaintance. Soon afterward he received a letter from his fair disputant where, after her signature, stood: "P. S.—Who is right now, you or I?"

A pert young barrister once boasted to a member of the bar that he had received twenty guineas for speaking in a certain law-suit; the other replied, "I received double that sum for keeping quiet in that very case."

"I was born in Bath," said a dirty looking customer, as he harangued a crowd at a political meeting, "and I love my native place." "You don't look as if you had ever been there since," said one of his hearers, as he proceeded to laud an opposition candidate.
