Incredible Liars.

The French papers in the Autumn of 1831 mentioned that a man named Desjardins was tried, on his own confession, as an accomplice with Louvel, the assassin of the Duke de Berri. But, on his defense, Desjardins contended that his confession ought not to be believed, because he was so notorious for falsehood, that nobody in the world would give credit to a word he said.

This case parallels a similar instance some years before in Ireland. A man was charged with highway robbery. In the course of the trial the prisoner roared out from the dock, that he was guilty; but the jury pronounced him "not guilty." The astonished Judge exclaimed—"Good heavens, gentleman, did you not hear the man himself declare that he was guilty?" The foreman said—"We did, my lord, and that was the reason we acquitted him, for we know the fellow to be such a notorious liar, that he never spoke a word of truth in his life, therefore we could not believe him on oath."

A stranger, wearing a white hat with a very wide brim called to it, was yesterday looking through the City Hall, and after he had inquired of a policeman the route to Elmwood Cemetery, the officer in turn remarked: "You have been beraved, I suppose?" "Not as I know on," replied the man. "I thought you had lost your wife, and were a widower."

"Ah! this hat deceived you," explained the man. "Well, I had the band put on because I don't know whether I'm a widower or not. The old lady and I have had six jaws and three tussles in three days, don't eat at the same table, each have a key to the front door, both cook what we eat, go and come when we want to, and I suppose I'm as much a widower as anything else."

A gentleman wishing to purchase a fine indigo-dyed coat, called upon a Hebrew "in whom there is no guile." The purchaser was very particular to impress upon the mind of the seller that he wanted an indigo, not a logwood-dyed cloth, the smell of the latter being offensive to him. The coat was selected and tried on, when our Hebrew friend commenced his encomiums. "Now you must look at dat. It was feet you like paper on the wall. Dat is just vat you want!" "Yes," said the customer, "but this is not I want. This is a logwood-dyed coat. I don't like the smell." "My fren," says our dealer, "dat is just vat you want. It ish not that coat dat shmells dat way, no, sir, dat ish me!"

Seeing the Elephant. A rowdy intending to be very witty thus accosted a lady in the street; "Madam, can you inform me where I can see the elephant?"

"No, but if I had a looking glass, I would show you a very large monkey." The rowdy sloped. "Do you know," remarked a rather fast Newark youth the other day to a stuttering friend to whom he was slightly indebted, "Do you know that I intend to marry and settle down?" "I do don't know anything about it," was the reply, "but but I think you had better stay single and settle up."

An enraged gentleman addressing from his chamber window a youth who had been serenading his daughter half an hour, said, "You are a great bore, and I think you mean to keep on boring until you get water," adding, "there it is," emptying a pitcherfull upon his head. A gentleman was accosted by a poor loafer, who asked for charity. "I will remember you the next time," replied the gentleman. "Please your honor," said the loafer, "I don't credit I deal on the cash principle."

A Chicago chap advertises for "steady girls to help on pantaloons." A fellow who can't help on his pantaloons, ought to be ashamed to want a girl to do it.

Conclusive. "Mankind," said a preacher, includes woman; for man embraces woman."

A quack says that he has invented a remedy for "the 2-thake, which will allevi-8 all pain 4th-with."
