A negro minister who married rather sooner after the death of his wife than some of the sisters thought proper and becoming, excused himself as follows: "My dear brederan and sisters, my grief was greater dan I could bear. I turned ebery way for peace and comfort, but none came. I searched de Scriptures from Ginnise to Rebelation and found plenty of promises to de widdler, but nary one to de widdlerer. So I took it dat de good Lord didn't waste any sympathy on a man when it was in his power to comfort hisself; and habin' a fustrate chance to marry in de Lord I did so, and would do so again. Besides, brederen, I consider dat poor Patsey was just as dead as she would eber be."

In one of our Sunday schools lately, a teacher was instructing a juvenile class about the word glutton. "Suppose," said she, "a man should sit down to dinner and eat as much as four persons—then get up and go to a restaurant and eat a lot more—then fill his pockets with crackers and cheese and keep eating. What would you call such a person? The boy who can answer will please hold up his hand." Up went the hand of a six-year-old boy. "Well, what would you call such a man?" asked the teacher. "A durned hog," rang out the clear and well fallicised reply.

A public spouter, while making a speech passed in the midst of it, and exclaimed, "Now, gentlemen, what do you think?" Instantly a man rose in the assembly, and, with one eye partially closed, modestly replied, "I think, sir—I do indeed, sir—I think that if you and I were to tramp the country together we could tell more lies than any other two men in the country, sir! and I'd not say a word during the whole time, sir."

A Little "Pop." "How nicely this corn pops," observed he, as they sat eating it together by the fire.

"Yes," replied she, holding down her head, "it's got over being green." Of course he couldn't stand such an inference as that, and might soon have been seen "popping" himself, and watching the glad light in her eyes as she blushingly said: "Go ask 'poppy'!"

During the review of a Sunday school a Sunday or two ago, the question was asked, "What became of Elijah?" and the entire congregation was electrified by a small shrill voice that piped out with extreme unction. "He went to heaven like a house afire, you bet."

A printer, meddling with the verdict of a coroner's jury, struck out a comma after the word "apoplexy," making it read thus: "Deceased came to his death by excessive drinking, producing apoplexy in the minds of the jury."

"What is a junction, nurse?" asked a seven-year-old fairy the other day of an elderly lady who stood by her side on a railway platform. "A junction my dear," answered nurse, "why, it's a place where two roads separates."

A dentist tried his first operation with gas upon a robust colored female. After she had used up all the gas in the office she wheeled in the chair and shouted: "Hurry up, boss, and bring on another bag of that sweetened wind."

A Massachusetts politician's opinion of the intermarriage of the whites and negroes was that he didn't believe in it. Said he, "I think that every one ought to marry one of his own sex."

The mother had cut her little daughter's hair to make "bangs." "Surveying her own work, she said: "Bessie, yesterday you looked as if you had no sense. To-day you look as if your mother had none."

As a frightened darkey, chased by an infuriated bull, neared the boundaries of the field, he enthusiastically exclaimed. "Millions of de fence, but not one cent for de brute."

An old lady being asked if she ever had her ears pierced by the wall of distress, said she couldn't very well remember, but she believed it was done with a fork.

One man said to another in an argument: "It's no use talking, you can't make twice three seven." "I can come within one of it," was the resolute answer."

A blunder-buss—Kissing the mother when you thought it was the daughter.
