Colic in Horses.

A well-informed correspondent says:—I notice your remarks in regard to scratches in horses, and I have no doubt that this complaint, as well as most all diseases, are the results of neglect and bad management. One of the most common, and frequently fatal, diseases that suddenly attack horses is colic, and this is invariably brought on by ignorance and bad treatment—such as overfeeding and watering, or working immediately after a full feed, or giving improper feed. I was near losing a valuable horse last fall from this last mentioned cause: Stopping at a country tavern to feed, I ordered oats—the usual feed for my horse—but the landlord's feed chest was empty, and the hostler, without my knowledge, gave a dozen ears of new corn; the result was a severe attack of colic, a day's detention at the tavern and the horse not fit again for hard work for four or five days. Another frequent cause of colic is feeding dry corn meal alone—without being moistened and mixed with cut hay or straw. The meal goes into the stomach in a hard doughy mass, and as the gastric juice can not penetrate this solid body, a tendency to fevers and colic is engendered as a natural consequence. I believe that farmers as a general rule, are not as watchful over the care of their horses, as they should be, leaving the manner of feeding too much to the discretion of their hired men. A hard worked horse should never leave his stable under one hour after a full feed, and then if he has been properly fed and watered, he would never be troubled with colic, blind staggers, foundered, or any of the common horse-diseases of the day.

Valuable Hints.

Never laugh at the mishaps of any fellow-mortals.

If a man faints, place him flat on his back and let him alone.

The best thing to stop the bleeding of a moderate cut instantly, is to cover it profusely with cobweb, or flour and salt, half and half.

If a man asks you to go his security, say "No," and run; otherwise you may be enslaved for life, or your wife and children may spend a weary existence in want, sickness, and beggary.

If any poison is swallowed drink instantly half a glass of cool water, with a heaping tea-spoonful each of common salt and ground mustard stirred into it. This vomits as soon as it reaches the stomach; but, for fear some of the poison may still remain, swallow the white of one or two raw eggs, or drink a cup of strong coffee, these two being antidotes for a greater number of poisons than any dozen other articles known, with the advantage of their being always at hand. If not, a half-pint of sweet oil, or lamp oil, or "drippings," or melted butter, or lard, are good substitutes, especially if they vomit quickly.

If the blood comes from a wound by jets or spurts, be quick, or the man will be dead in a few minutes, because an artery is severed; tie a handkerchief loosely around near the part, between the wound and the heart; put a stick between the handkerchief and the skin, twist it round until the blood ceases to flow, and keep it there until the doctor comes. If in a position where a handkerchief cannot be used, press the thumb on a spot near the wound, between the wound and the heart; increase the pressure until the bleeding ceases, but do not lessen that pressure for an instant until the physician arrives, so as to glue up the wound by the coagulation or hardening of the cooling blood.

Curing in the cock, will require two or three days time. The grass or clover cut in the forenoon may be raked up before evening and thrown into winrows. These may be left until the afternoon of the next day, when they may be thrown into tall cocks, containing about 300 or 400 lbs., and left one day and night to sweat. In this condition the hay ferments and heats, and the excess of moisture is driven off. This process ripens the hay and improves it very much. After this curing, and a little airing, there is no danger of the hay heating in the mow or stack.

Grafts set this spring need to be kept watch of; often but one bud will push, and this send out a long vigorous straight shoot, which in heavy winds will be broken or pulled out. Pinch the tops of such shoots to make them branch. Indeed, treat a graft in a tree, as if it were a young tree planted in the ground. If shoots appear on the stock below the graft, break them off while yet young.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap, besides eradicating local diseases of the skin, banishes defects of the complexion and imparts to it gratifying clearness and smoothness.
