PRINTING of every description neatly executed at the Bloomfield Times Office at reasonable rates.

A young couple were sitting together in a romantic spot, with birds and flowers about them, when the following dialogue ensued:

"My dear, if the sacrifice of my life would please you, most gladly would I lay it at your feet."

"Oh, you are too kind! but it just reminds me that I wish you'd stop using tobacco."

"Can't think of it; it is—it is a habit to which I am wedded."

"Very well, sir, as you are wedded to tobacco, I'll take good care you are never wedded to me, as it would be bigamy."

Children often ask questions that old folks can't answer. "Pa," asked his little boy, "what made your face turn so red to-day in church when the minister said that some men spent fifty cents a day for cigars and can't afford to give their wives ten cents to put into the contribution box on Sunday?"

"Why, I don't know—guess my face wasn't red, was it?"

"Yes, it was, wasn't it, ma—just as red?"

Observe how easy it is for the stern parent to be forced into chancery. An obliging gentleman, who thinks that personal favors do not cost much, while they make friends, was applied to by a negro for a certificate of character, by which he might get a situation. The testimonial proving to be more complimentary than Scipio himself expected, that worthy, on recovering from his astonishment, exclaimed: "Say, Mr. —, won't you gib me something to do yourself on dat recommendation?"

As a dandy was wending his way through a narrow passage at the top of Charlotte street, Glasgow, he met a pretty girl, and said to her: "Pray my dear, what do you call this passage?"

"Balaam's passage," she replied. "Ah, then," said he, "I am like Balaam—stopped by an angel." "And I," rejoined the girl, as she pushed past him, "I'm like the angel—stepped by an ass."

Sir Fletcher Norton was noted for his want courtesy. When pleading before Lord Mansfield, on some question of manorial right, he chanced, unfortunately, to say:

"My Lord, I can illustrate the point in an instant in my own person; I, myself, have two little manors." The Judge immediately interposed, with one of his blindest smiles, "We all know it, Sir Fletcher."

A witty clergyman, accosted by an old acquaintance by the name of Cobb, replied: "I don't know you sir." "My name is Cobb, sir," rejoined the man, who was about half seas over. "Ah, sir," said the minister, "you have so much corn on that I did not see the cob."

A story is told of a jolly fellow who resided in Chicago about forty years, and while on an Eastern visit was asked how he liked the water out West. "By jingo, Mr. Jones, said he, after a moment's reflection, "I never thought to try it."

"Is that a friend of yours?" asked a gentleman, pointing to a party who was sailing rapidly down the street. "Can't tell you till next Saturday," returned the individual addressed, "I've just lent him a dollar."

"Why is it, my dear sir," said S.'s landlord to him the other day, "that you newspaper men never get rich?" "I do not know," was the reply, "except it is that dollars and sense do not always travel together."

"How many feet long was the snake?" asked a person of a traveler, who had just related a story of his encounter with a boa killed by him. "One hundred and ninety-two inches," was the reply,—"snakes have no feet."

The friction match folks didn't get Congress to release them from putting a revenue stamp on each bunch. They may plead and protest their tax as they will, but the cent of the matches will hang round it still.

"Does your sister Annie ever say anything about me, sissy?" asked an anxious lover of a little girl. "Yes," was the reply, "she said if you had rockers on your shoes they'd make a nice cradle for my doll."

"What is the name of your cat, sir?" inquired a visitor. "His name was Will," said the host, "until he had the fits, and since then we have called him Fitz William."
