"I'm a Dunce, Sir."

"What's your name?" a teacher out in the country asked a new pupil. "I'm a dunce, sir," replied the boy.

The teacher's eyes dilated a little, and thinking he hadn't understood, said: "What did you say?"

"I'm a dunce, sir," repeated the boy who was rather a bright-looking lad.

"You're a dunce, are you?" said the teacher, smiling. "No, sir," said the boy.

"Why, didn't you say so?" "No, sir," "Yes, you did."

"No, sir." The teacher was about to appeal to the school to sustain him when a thought struck him, and turning to the boy he asked: "What is your first name?"

"Isaac, sir." "And your next?" "May, sir."

The teacher was quivering with excitement now, and he was fairly trembling with eagerness as he asked: "And the last?"

"Dunn, sir." "Now, say it again, the whole of it," shouted the pedagogue.

"I. May Dunn, sir." "Boys," yelled the teacher, "always take care and be correct and particular in your pronunciation. Let this be a warning to you."

For the Credit of the Family. A young gentleman was passing a little girl on Seventh street yesterday who was sitting on the doorsteps and making the air melodious humming over a tune.

He was interested by the sweet and intelligent appearance of the child, and accosting her the following dialogue took place: "Sissy, what's your pa's name?"

This was politely answered by the little girl. "How many brothers have you?" "Four or five."

"How many sisters?" "Four or five." The young man's curiosity being satisfied he passed on. The mother of the little four-year-old (who had neither brother or sister) overheard the conversation, and calling her in asked her why she had stori'd to the man and received the following cute reply:

"Well, mamma, I didn't want the gentleman to think we was poor as to have no children."—Columbia (O). Statesman.

The Dutchman's Cheese. "Give me some Limburger and a glass of beer," said a chap as he sat down and placed his feet up on the table.

The saloon keeper brought the beer and cheese, when the chap sang out, "this is no good cheese there is no smell to it."

"Not good cheese," Got in himmel it ish yust splendif."

"Put your nose down and smell it then," replied his customer.

The saloon keeper placed his nose down to the cheese, and then toward the feet on the table, and as he raised up turned to the chap and said in an injured tone of voice.

"Dake off dose feets vrom dere dable, und gif der cheese some show, und den it vill pe all right, don't it?"

The following has been on its travels in the newspapers for some time, and it will soon be reasonable, we give it for what it is worth:

"Father, who travels the road so late?" "Hush, my child, 'tis the candle date. Fit examples for human woes—Early he comes and early he goes, He greets the women with courtly grace, He kisses the baby's dirty face, He calls to the fence the farmers at work, He bores the merchant, he bores the clerk, The blacksmith, while his anvil rings, He greets, and this is the song he sings: 'Howdy, howdy, howdy do? How is you wife, and how are you? Ah! it fits my first as no other can, The horny first of the workingman!'"

The jokers who included a piece of stained brick among the "geological specimens" which they placed upon the desk of the professor as objects worthy of his explanatory remarks, received the following rebuke:—Taking up one of the specimens, he said: "This is a piece of feldspar from the Portland quarries. And this," coming to the brick, "is a piece of impudence from some member of the class."

A fair one wrote to her lover, begging him to send her some money. She added by way of postscript: "I am so ashamed of the request I made in this letter that I sent after the postman to get it back, but the servant could not overtake him."
