"My onthankful hearers," said a backwoods preacher, "you air like onto hogs eatin' acorns. They never look up to see where the acorns come from."

"No," replied Mrs. Malaprop, slowly "I can't say that I ever was in Dublin, but my mother has a second cousin called Irish who dealt in Cork; so there!"

An agricultural society offered a premium for the best mode of irrigation, which was printed "irritation" by mistake. A farmer sent his wife to claim the prize.

A correspondent at a Summer resort says there are "no pretty young girls here." We bet there are some pretty old girls there who try to make themselves pretty young.

"Brother, why don't you ask the stranger to pray?" "Because," reprovingly observed a deacon, "this ain't no place for practice jokes. That man has not paid his subscription to his local paper in three years."

A little four-year-old, a native and resident of New Jersey, while watching the lightning flashes from his nursery window a few evenings since, during a storm, turned to its nurse and remarked that "God was scratching matches against the sky."

While Strobel and his wife were out walking the other evening, somebody got into his house and carried off every stitch of his clothing, including shirts. "It was mighty lucky," said Strobel, absently to his wife, as the full extent of the loss came upon him, "that I just happened to have these on—now, wasn't it?"

A lady teacher in one of the primary departments of a college, recently, while trying to impress on the minds of a juvenile class the difference between the human and the animal composition, asked, "What are we all made of?" "Dust," was the prompt reply. "What are hogs made of?" "Slop!" was the unanimous response.

A Scotch gentleman being plagued by poachers, procured a human leg from the hospital, dressed it in a stocking and shoe, and sent it through the neighboring village by the town crier who proclaimed that it had been found in a man-trap last night in Mr. Ross's grounds, who desired to return it to the owner. No more poaching.

An Irishman accosted a gentleman on the street, late at night, with a request for the time. The gentleman, suspecting that Pat wished to snatch his watch, gave him a stinging rap on the nose, with the remark, "It has just struck one!" "Be jabbers," retorted Pat, "I'm glad I didn't ask yez an hour ago!"

The infant class of a Sunday-school on Church street were being drilled by the good teacher on the early life of the Savior. "Johnny, can you tell me where Christ was born?" said she. "Easton, ma'am, replied the youth. "Why, no, Johnny," said the amazed young lady, "Christ was born in Bethlehem." "Well," said Johnny, "I knew it was some place on the Le-high Valley Road."

She was a Boston Girl. She was a Boston girl. She was visiting her Whitehall county cousins. While walking out, several butterflies passed her.

"Oh, dear me, what charming little birds. They are perfectly exquisite." "They are not birds, my dear," replied her country cousin, "they are butterflies."

"Oh, you don't say so? Then these are the dear little creatures that fly from flower to flower and gather the sweet yellow butter that we use? They are too lovely for anything."

A gentleman, while out taking a drive, had the misfortune to have his carriage upset, and himself and a newly engaged young Scotch coachman thrown into the road. The gentleman was not seriously hurt, his principle loss being that of his wig. He found his servant stand in the middle of the road holding his head with one hand, through the fingers of which the blood was freely trickling, while he gazed with a stupefied sense of horror upon his master's wig, which he held at arm's length in his other hand. "Weel, Sandy, are you much hurt?" inquired the master, compassionately. "Hurt?" exclaimed Sandy, in a tone that betrayed an injury to his feelings by the bare inquiry. "Ay, I'm dootin' I'll no leave ta see morn after this. Div ye no see I hae lost the top o' my head?"
