As the November election approached, the political speakers sent out to save the country become very much in earnest. In his speech recently one of them yelled so loud that he burst a boil on a man standing on the opposite curbstone.

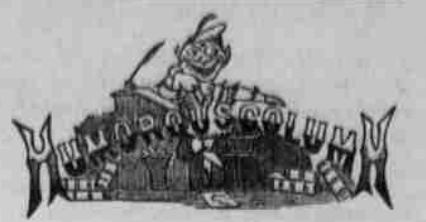

The song of the baker: "I Knead Thee Every Hour." The first note of the song is dough.

Why is the letter "I" never too late? Because it is always in time.

Said Jake Metzenmaker to his sweet-heart: "Loweeza you vas a poody gal!" To which that bright-eyed young German damsel replied: "Shake, dot vas nice, say it again."

"Py golly! Jake exclaimed, "You vas more beautiful ash a budder cup, and I hope you vill marry me right away."

"Then that sensible young woman responded. "Shake, I like dot marriage idea poody vell. I peleve me it vas a sensible peezness. Und I like you, Shake, more ash a gooble dimes. But I vants segurdy."

"Vant's segurdy! I undershtand me no such dings," said Jake in amazement.

"Nein? Right away I dote you. Ouf you read dose babers, you find out it vas a great peezness by married fellers to run aroundt the saloon, und don't like to vork und oufter the wife say some dings she got a plack eye, and then she vas goome by the Police Court for some segurdy for make him do petter."

"Put you don't vas peleve I do such a dings, Loweeza? I schwear dot my lofe—"

"Schwear vas a leedle fence not more ash gooble feed high, und you slump over him shoost as easy ash you like. I peleve you vas right now, Shake. Put there vas a great risk, and I vant some segurdy for dose dime when you vill be poss."

"Und you vond marry me widout dot segurdy?"

"I peleve me, Shake, it vas petter ve got him now ash py-und-py ouf dot Bolice Court—ain'd id?"

"Vell, vat segurdy you vant?"

"I tink anyvay a tousand tollars pond vould be about right."

"A tousand tollars! I don'd know over I find some man vhatlike to shain hisself py such a gueldt."

"If you don'd could find a friend mit dot much gonfidence py you, Shake, vhat sort of a shance you dink I dake?"

"Anyvay, I do it," said Jake, after a short consideration.

"All right; you gif me segurdy dot you sthay all de dime a goot man, und vork for my life, den I vas villing you dalk mit dot berson shoost so quick you mind to.

Und now Shake, dat vas all good seddled. Say dose nice dings over again and I gif you von leetle kiss on credid!"

The hardest fighter in Belden, Mich., saunters into a barroom, leans on the bar, and says to the loungers: "Well, boys, what 'ye going to drink?"

The loungers range themselves in front of the bar and call for various beverages. The fighter says, "Give me a glass of ale," and, after all have drunk, lays down five cents. The bartender says that the bill is seventy cents, or whatever the bill happens to be.

"The bill be blowed," exclaims the fighter; "I pays for what I drinks—one beer, five cents. I didn't treat them fellers. I just asked 'em what they'd drink, out of mere curiosity."

A young man from the country having married a city vocalist, proudly wrote home that his wife was a first class singer with a remarkable voice.

"In fact," he wrote, "she has a mezzosoprano of unusual power and compass." His mother immediately answered: "My son, that is what your Aunt Keziah died of. She waited too long before she had been operated on. Don't delay. Have it cut out at once.

A little girl the other day told the school mistress there was sickness in her home, and was sent home to learn the name of the disease. Next morning after roll-call she bashfully advanced and said: "Please, Miss, ma says we have a little baby at our house; but you needn't be afraid for it ain't catching."
