

A Terrible Struggle.

This world is full of incidents of trouble, danger and death, but none are more striking in their detail of horror than those which are associated with jealousy, that most uncontrollable of all passions. Here is an incident which actually occurred along the track of the Pennsylvania railroad, near Forster street, in front of the open lot of that vicinity. A man and his wife had had a serious difficulty owing to his disposition to pass his time in company into which no married man ought to go. A week ago the woman shadowed him, and discovering his haunt of illicit pleasure, ran him down and confronted him in his lawless and faithless career. While they were on their return home, and when passing along at the point we indicate above, they quarreled furiously, the woman bitterly reproaching her traitor husband, and the wicked wretch retorting with charges in kind, he suddenly became transported with rage, seized her by the throat, and attempted to shove her under a freight train then thundering by. The woman fought with a desperation that was increased in fury as she thought of her ill treatment, grasping her murderously inclined husband around the body and declaring that if he should throw her under the train she would drag him with her. It was a scene of horror and intense agony for the poor wife. Her husband was made demonic by guilt and drink, and for a moment seemed bent on his desperate purpose, but the wild struggles of his horrified wife, and his cowardly heart shrinking from sharing the death which she held him with cool resolution to meet, deterred him from his act, and the train passed on. The ruffian then turned on his wife and began to beat her with renewed fury, rolling her in the snow, dragging her over the ice and trampling upon her, when the approach of a watchman put an end to the fracas. As the woman described the terror of the scene to her friends it must have been one of the most terrible through which any woman ever passed, and can well be related as one of the many incidents of horror which are coupled with the jealousy of a desperate woman and a guilty man.—Harrisburg Telegraph.

Wagon and Coffin Upset.

Saturday a week while an apprentice boy of Mr. Henry Everhart, undertaker, of Manchester borough was on his way with a coffin in a wagon, from that town to White's ferry, on the Susquehanna, he undertook to go along a back road; some parties met him and warned him that the road was very icy, and almost if not totally impassable. The boy, however, persisted, and undertook the difficult passage. The road passes along the side of the river hills, and slopes off very suddenly at places, and has a descent to valleys of some feet. There was a man with the boy, and both got out of the wagon, one leading the horse, and the other tried to keep the wagon on the road. As they continued their course became every moment more perilous, and finally the horse and wagon slipped from the road, and they were compelled to, let go, so as to save themselves; the horse wagon and coffin went sliding over the icy declivity. In the descent the animal lost a pair of shoes. Strange to say, neither the wagon nor coffin were injured. After the arrival of the above at the bottom, they hastened after them and adjusted affairs. Another horse was procured and they continued upon their mission.—York Democrat.

Mr. John Steward, a farmer residing on Sugar run, Blair county, while walking behind his wagon was startled by the sharp report of a rifle and the stinging sensation of the ball that grazed his forehead. From the ascending smoke he discovered the assassin was concealed in a thicket near the road. He made no mention of the attack on his life, but since has found a notice on his fence stating that the next ball would be sent with better aim and into his head. As he is a Christian man who desires to harm no person, he is at a loss to know the reason his life is to be taken.

The decline in rents in and about London, Eng., is a feature of hard times that is attracting considerable attention, and shows that not only has there been a fancy price to property there for years, but that prices have been more fictitious there than with us. From the London "Times" we learn that in the suburbs, attractive twelve-room houses, with coach-house and out-houses for servants, may be had thoroughly furnished for £140—about $720. This is cheaper than such property can be rented near any city in the United States.

"Do hogs pay?" asks an agricultural correspondent. We know of some that don't. They subscribe for a paper, read it for a few years for nothing and then send it back to the publishers, with the inscription, "refused." Such hogs as that pay nobody if they can help it.

Political disturbances have broken out again in Lincoln county, New Mexico. H. J. Chapman, a lawyer, was shot dead at the court-house on the 19th inst.

A Well, Spouting Fire and Brine.

A portion of the salt business is likely to be diverted from Syracuse. For some time a company has been engaged in sinking a salt well at LeRoy. A Rochester writer says: There were no decided results until Tuesday afternoon, but the demonstration was lively enough then, and for a few moments the frightened workmen were under the impression that their drill had pierced the infernal regions. Shortly after 12 o'clock the depth of 450 feet was reached when gas appeared in moderate quantities, but gradually the supply increased and at 2 o'clock it came out with such a rush that it was ignited by the fire in a coal stove, ten feet distant from the mouth of the well. The house in which the men were working was instantly filled with flames and they barely escaped with their lives. In a few seconds the woodwork caught fire and the destruction seemed inevitable, but the gas was followed by a rush of water which rose to a height of fifty feet in the air, quickly extinguishing the flames. Then followed alternate floods of gas and jets of water, each one holding its own for about a minute and a half before it gave up to the other. The water had a strong sulphurid taste at first, with a slight appearance of salt, and as the supply of gas commenced to diminish, the flow of water increased. By degrees the water became less sulphurous and more thickly impregnated with salt, until at half-past five o'clock it was strong brine, spouting to a height of seventy feet. Steadily increasing, at half-past seven o'clock it reached an altitude of one hundred and ten feet, which it held. The bore of the well is eight inches, and the casing taking up about an inch, leaves an opening of seven inches in diameter from which the solid stream is thrown high in the air. At the latest reports the field in which the well is located was flooded with brine.
