HENRY AYLE, CHRISTIAN HARNISH, [Executors] LEWIS POTTER, Att'y. January 21, 1879. pu

"Said a lady to the famous actor, Garrick, 'I wish you were taller.' 'Madame,' replied the wit, 'how happy I should be to stand higher in your estimation.'"

Wilkins has quit the study of botany now. He was frightened nearly to death by a bullrush. The bull rushed right at him, and the fence was about seventy five yards off.

One of the most delicate bits of humor in the Bible is Hosea's description of Ephraim as "a cake not turned." The prophet didn't want to hurt Ephraim's feelings by calling him "half-baked."

"Mariah! Mariah! please let me in," said a man to his wife, who was looking out of the window watching him trying to open the door with a toothpick. "I sh tread on my key and it's all flattened out."

Josh Billings says: There is one thing about a hen that looks like wisdom; they don't kackke much until after they have laid their egg. Some pholks are alwuz a braggin and a keekling what they are going tew do bee fore hand.

A gentleman having given a goose to his servant Patrick as a Christmas present, meeting him a short time afterward, asked him how he liked the goose. "Och, y'r honor'sure it was a fine bird. I never see a goose or a ganther I don't think of y'r honor."

"Here," said the farmer, as he exhibited a broken jar to the manufacturer, "I packed this jar full of butter, and the jar split from top to bottom. Perhaps you can explain the phenomenon." "Oh, yes, I can," was the ready reply; "the butter was stronger than the jar."

Scene: London Bookshop. Bookseller: "What sort of books do you want, sir?" Baggs (of Winconsin): "O, such books as a gentleman generally has." Bookseller: "And how many?" Baggs: "Wal, my library is twelve by fifteen, and I want it full." Bookseller: "Will you have them bound in Russia or Morocco?" Baggs: "O, don't send them so far! Have them bound in London."

Mansons Bird Story. Mr. Manson, Gil Shanklin and the writer were sitting patiently waiting for oysters at an eating place, when Manson said:

"Shanklin, can you tell a young female canary bird from a male one?"

"No, Mr. Manson, I cannot," replied Shanklin, and cocking his eyeglass on his dexter optic, said, "Can you?"

"Yes," stoutly spoke up Manson. "You feed the young birds with angle worms, and the male birds will invariably eat the male worms and the female birds the female worms."

"But how in the happy land, Manson, can you tell the sex of the worms?"

"Shanklin," solemnly said Manson, "I was telling you a bird story, not a worm narrative."

Kissing by Proxy. Some time since one of the brightest and wittiest of Cincinnati's girls went abroad, and when she returned home, about the first person to congratulate her on her safe return was B—, a young blood of the city, whose dollars exceeded his sense in the ratio of about a million to one.

"Aw, Miss X—," he said, "permit me to greet you. I know you have had a very pleasant trip abroad."

"Yes," she answered, "very pleasant indeed. I was all over the continent and through England, Scotland and Ireland."

"Ah, in Ireland; and did you see the Blarney stone?"

"Yes, I was there."

"Oh, I should so delight to see it. It has always been a desire of mine to kiss that celebrated stone, but I have never had the opportunity."

"Indeed, then you should."

"I know, but I have not done so, but why shouldn't I kiss it by proxy? You have been there and kissed it, why should I not take the influence of the Blarney from your lips?"—and the smart Aleck stepped forward to proxyify the young lady. But she drew back, and looked him square in the face, said:

"I beg your pardon, my dear Mr. B—, but I sat upon the Blarney stone."

Like a man with a great sorrow, B— sank down in a heap, and he hasn't said "Ireland" since, and the very word "Blarney" makes him delirious.
