Europe's Troubles.

LONDON, September 9 .- It is said that the cereal harvest in King's county, Ireland, has been virtually lost in consequence of heavy rains and floods, which commenced on Saturday last. There are also bad reports from County Down regarding the crops.

LONDON, Sep., 9 .- The Paris "Bulletin des Halles" says the first threshings in the West and Northwest of France show a very poor yield both in quantity and quality, so there is no set-off to the bad results in the Southwest, East and Centre. Though France will not have to purchase abroad so largely as last year, she will require fifteen or twenty million hectolitres, and must buy it almost exclusively in America in competition with England.

London, Sep., 9. - The Manchester "Guardian" says it is estimated that thirty thousand persons are still out of work in Glasgow. The iron trades only are doing well. The building trades are in the worst condition, and it will be necessary again to make provision to assist the unemployed during the coming winter. Mr. Bell, architect and surveyor, of Mauchester has failed. His liabilities are given at £48,500.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE, Sep., 9 .- One of the greatest struggles ever known in the cotton trade here will probably be entered upon at the end of this week. The employers decline to withdraw their notices of a 5-per cent, reduction of wages, and the spinners and weavers are determined to resist the reduction. If a strike ensues nearly all of the working people of the Ashton district will be envolved, and the strike will probably be a protracted one, as the spinners' union is amply provided with funds.

The New York Rowdy.

The traditional New York rowdy, the terror of the suburban watering-places and excursion parties, and the street-corner scarecrow of belated and unprotected females-aye, and of many males as wellappears to be passing away. Time was, not many years ago, when he flourished without restrait or interruption, made whole neighborhoods impassable for decent people, and turned summer resorts convenient to the city into scenes of howling riot. His appearance was a familiar one on the street corners. He seldom allowed more hair on his face than a mustache, usually dyed black, with traces of its original color appearing half an inch from the roots, but as a rule he went beardless, wore a soft felt hat, with the brim bent down in front and bent up behind; pegged boots, with high resounding heels; a long black coat and the loudest style of lavender or fancy pantaloons, tight above the knees. In summer he dispenses with shirt collars, and seldom troubled himself with the incumbrance of a pocket bandkerchief. He was accustomed to chew great quantities of fine cut tobacco, and as he stood on a corner to spit half way across the street, just in front of a passing lady. When he smoked he held his eigar at an upward slant of forty-five degrees. His face had usually a florid color, and his breath impregnated the air around him with the odor of unrectified whisky. His laugh and voice were both loud and metallic, and his every other link in the chain of his conversation was either a profane or obscene epithet. His daring and ferocity were never properly developed except when acting with a gang, for on his own book he was sneaking and spiritless. His great delight was a trip to Rockaway, Coney Island, Fort Lee, or anywhere up the Hudson; in fact, he infested almost every retreat not too far from the city, and he left his unhallowed mark wherever he went. The day had no enjoyment for him when he and his companions failed to wreck a bar, to make away with whisky and beer without payment, pound the barkeeper to a jelly, and spare the women and children almost to death. When he accomplished this much he was happy and independent. The bashi-bazouk of New York society is no longer the terror he was. The multiplied civilizing forces around him have made him assume the disguises of propriety or else be driven from the haunts of men. The rowdy no doubt is still in our midst; but, like the tame tiger, his claws are out, his teeth are drawn and we hear his roar but seldom. The corner loafers are gradually disappearing, and where they still prevail they have grown civilized.

It would be impossible for an occurrence, such as took place thirteen years ago at the corner of Fifth street and the Bowery, to happen there now. A respectable citizen named Mr. Little was on his way home from his business at six o'clock in the evening, and when passing the corner judicated was struck on the cheek with a piece of rotten apple flung by one of four rowdies there standing, whose type is given in the preceding sketch. Incensed at such an outrage Mr. Little turned, and looking in the direction whence the missile came demanded what it was meant for.

"See here, cap," answered one of the ruffians, approaching with his hand behind on a revolver, "jes' g'loug 'bout yer biz and spit out no sass or you won't know you were borned." Little, who carrieds a powerful walking stick, responded with a threatening gosture, for his blood was up and he was smarting under an indignity. The rowdy instantly presented his revolver, which Little, with a prompt and vigorous blow of his stick, knocked upward and out into the street, and with the next whirl of his faithful weapon laid the rowdy prostrate on the sidewalk. Quickly his three companious rushed to the attack, and one of the most desperate encounters of the kind that ever happened in this city then took place, for two policemen came on the scene, and, along with Little, grappled with the three rowdies. Little fell down a basement, with his assailant on top of him, who stabbed him seven times. The other two rowdies disabled the two policemen, one of whom, Officer O'Brien, subsequently died, but more officers coming up with revolvers drawn, the fight extending and the blood covering the wide area near Tompkins Market, the four rowdies were subdued, two of them dying on the ground and the other two being carried to Bellevue Hospital in a wagon. Mr. Little, who was a man of strong physique, recovered after a period of six weeks.

The rowdy of that day has happily disappeared from these quarters. He is no longer to be found on this particular corner, which was so much the dread of respectable citizens passing that way. On the extreme east and west sides of town he may still cut up some shines, but the rough and sanguinary nature of the beast is greatly toned down,-New York Herald.

An Illinois farmer astonished Decatur by going into that place with a train of six wagons, laden with 375 bushels of barley, and drawn by a steam road locomotive of his own invention.
