Rye Township Correspondence.

JULY, 20th, 1880.

MR. EDITOR:—As I have not seen any notice in your valuable paper this long time of our quiet and peaceable township of Rye, I thought I would give you a few items.

Well, our farmers have just finished the best harvest ever put away in this township. The oats were short but well filled, the hay crop was good, and the corn is promising, considering the long dry spell we have had.

There are some improvements being made here. Mr. Leiby has put up a splendid house on the Dars farm. Neyhart & Son have attached a steam power to their mill, so as to be able to accommodate their customers in dry seasons.

Mr. Editor.—Dear Sir—Having been requested by a number of persons to give some account of this place, I will ask a small corner of your worthy paper as the best place I can find in order to reach them, knowing that everybody in that corner of the world reads the Times.

Versailles is not a very large city, "a feature common to western cities," but is beautifully located on an elevation rising gradually from the prairie on the north, east and west, and it thus commands a view of as fine a section of level prairie land as man ever beheld.

The new railroad has been built. It was completed this summer and is now doing a good business. It is called the Versailles Branch and intersects the Mo. Pacific at Tipton.

The citizens are intelligent and industrious; as farmers are all interested in the crops, I will say the crops that have been harvested have been good and the corn crop is looking very fine thus far, and as I am writing, we are enjoying a very fine shower of rain, which will make the corn a sure crop in this locality.
