Murdered for Saying No.

MUSCOORE, Indian Territory, September 25.-A few days since the daughter of old man Adams, a white man skulking in the Creek Nation, shot and killed the postmaster of Tulsa, named Church, because he refused to marry her. Sitting on a white horse, he was riding by the log shanty of the Adamses, when the woman halled him with a revolver hidden under her apron, and, standing in front of the house, asked Church, also a white man, the usual leapyear question, to which he gave an emphatto "No." Deliberately she raised the pistol and sent a 45 calibre bullet through his heart.

He still sat on his horse, the blood running down either flank, when she again took aim at his heart. The swaying body received it just above the heart, the ball crashed through and splitting the shoulder blade. The man fell dead at her feet, and she then dragged the body to the side of the road, took off her apron and spread it carefully over the dead face, caught her pony, and riding to a neighbor, told what she had done. In the quaint language of the fcontier she said : "You 'uns will find his body down by the road, and you'd better take care of it before the hogs eat it."

She then rode to another neighbor, two miles the other way passing by the body as she went. Then, piloting one of the neighbors to the scene of the murder, she coolly dismounted and went about her work .--Through fear of lynching, however, herself and father took their skiff and started down the Arkansas river, but were picked up two days later by Indian police, and are now awaiting trial in the United States jall at Fort Smith.

A Gay Time in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 11 .- The celebration of the 150th anniversary of the settlement and foundation of this city commenced this morning with a salute of one hundred guns from the United States ships Vandalia and Kearsarge, lying in the harbor off Fort McHenry. The city was handsomely decorated, and the hundreds of platforms along the route of the parade were crowded from an early hour. The main feature of the day was the procession to illustrate the history, industry and progress of Baltimore in all branches of trade and the arts. At 9.30 A. M. precisely Deputy City Marshal Frey began to move at the head of the line, and it was a little after three o'clock in the afternoon when the last wagon passed the starting point. The line of march was twelve miles in length, there being ten divisions, representing various interests. On reaching the park the ceremonies were opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Leakin, followed by speeches by the orators of the day, Colonel Fred. Raine, in German, and Colonel J. Thomas Scharf, in English. The formal proceedings terminated about five o'clock. At night the streets were brilliantly illuminated by electric and calcium lights. The crowd was enormous, and a few over-occupied stagings broke down, but no one was seriously injured. In every respect the demonstration was highly successful and creditable.

Fairchild, arrested in Chicago and taken to Kansas for the murder of his wife's stepfather explains that while he was in Wichita, in 1878, as a machine agent, and his wife, little child, and his wife's stepfather, Richard French, resided on a farm of his in Harper county, that, returning home unexpectedly, he discovered relations " which he had previously suspected, and that he brained French with an axe. His wife begged for her own life, and together they concealed the dead body. Then, after two months, they returned to Ohio, where they parted, his wife remaining at Toledo, Fairchild states he came to Chicago, and, in the course of time, married again, and has been working in a machine shop in that city ever since. Fairchild further states that the reason of his capture is that he married again and quit sending money to his Toledo wife, and that the detective who brought him to Kansas was interested with her in the matter.

A Sudden Freak of a Fireman.

The Kalamazoo Telegraph says: Last evening the engine of a freight train on the G. R. & I., coming south was the scene of a queer episode. A fireman named Bert Couners suddenly stripped off his coat and threw it into the fire box; then his vest went after his coat ; then he threw his watch, worth about $40, into the same flery receptacle ; then his hat ; then his loaded revolver, which made quite a lively racket; then he took out a small Bible, and putting 50 cents into that, threw both into the fire. By this time the first paroxysm had so far subsided that the engineer was able to subdue him; the engine was stopped and he was taken back into the caboose, watched and coutrolled till the train arrived here, when he was taken to jail for safe keeping. His friends at Fort Wayne were at once telegraphed to. The unfortunate man is about 28 years of age, and has been married but a few months.
