HOUSE, FARM AND GARDEN.

Clover as a Recuperator.

We make the following extract from Dr. Harland's work on " Farming with Green Manures," as lately published in the Country Gentleman:

It is a very common practice among agricultural writers to advise all persons having large farms which are in a very poor condition to sell one-half or twothirds of their land, and apply all the money they receive in manuring and improving the balance of their property.

In some cases this may be the most prudent course to follow, but, as a general rule, I am opposed to this advice, for two very good reasons:

First, you can get very little per acre for your poor fields; and, secondly, if you improve your property with judgment, you can enhance its value so rapidly that in seven or eight years it will be worth double or treble its former val-

To begin improvement, take the old field about half a mile from the house, and which is covered with thin yellow grass and a mellow soil, about one or two inches deep, produced by many years of exposure to the weather.

It has never been ploughed since you knew it. And I beg you do not plow it now, at the beginning of your efforts to make it better. Let me show you what a coating of fine, mellow earth is worth upon its surface

In Egypt the annual overflow of the Nile deposits on the land a thin stratum of very fine soil, which amounts to only four or five inches in a century. This yearly settling, which is only the twentieth of an inch in thickness, of almost impalpable dust, keeps the farms forever rich and productive. The Egyptians do not plow this precious coat under; but sow the seed on the moist ground, as the waters subside, and then, if possible, they drive sheep and hogs or goats over it, to press the seed into the soil.

We should learn a useful lesson from their example and experience. We should not plow down the only part which the air has enriched, by mingling and uniting with it for so many years; but early in the spring we should harrow as many acres of the old field as we can sow with clover seed, at one peck to the acre. After the seed is sown, we should roll the ground, and sow one or two bushels of plaster per acre.

The principal roots of all plants must be near the surface, that they may feel the life-giving influences of air and moisture; or the soil must be loosened by nature or by tillage, that the atmosphere may penetrate even the deepest fibers of vegetation. Hence the reason that plant food acts so well upon the surface and that all seeds germinate more quickly, more naturally, when covered by only one or two inches of soil. But these great truths must not be misunderstood. Though the soil must be ose, the finer the seed the greater the necessity, when planting or sowing, of pressing with the hand or foot, or roller, the earth into close contact with the

Well, to return to our old field. If the clover should grow five or six inches high by the middle of August, give it a half or whole bushel more of plaster per acre. The second year you must treat in the same way; and if the clover is thin on the ground, sow more seed and again roll it well. Do all this the third and fourth year, if necessary. After this it will reseed itself, provided you continue the plaster each year.

Here is a practical illustration of this plan, which I know to be a fact.

A person bought a very poor farm near the southern boundary of Pennsylvania, and tried to raise grain upon it in the usual way; but nothing grew large or strong enough to produce seed. Fortunately, he did not sacrifice the property by selling it at a very low figure, as many would have done. He sowed every acre of it with clover seed and plastered it every year. For a living he followed the profession of an auc-

About seven or eight or more years the clover grew upon his farm, undisturbed by plow or hoof of any kind. Then he concluded to try his hand again at farming. Many of his neighbors gathered to see the first plowing, after so long a rest from tillage,

An old farmer who was present assured me that the soil turned over eight or nine inches deep as black as your hat and as mellow as an ash heap

More than fifty years have now passed since that occurrence, and the farm has the reputation of being rich and productive to the present day

Gents — I have been very low, and have tried everything, to no advantage. I heard your Hop Bitters recommended by so many, I concluded to give them a trial. I did, and now am around, and constantly improving, and am hearly as staong as ever. 87-89 W. H. WELLER.
