Diseases of the Horse.

Horses are liable to many ailments, and some that run their course very rapidly. It is not possible, within the limits of this article, to discuss them, and their treatment should be left in the hands of the veterinary surgeon.

An unthrifty horse will receive great benefit from three ounces cold-drawn linseed oil, given every alternate night, for a fortnight, in a cold mash.

Young horses, when shedding their teeth, or cutting the bridle teeth; and older ones, when put on higher feeding than they are accustomed to, sometimes suffer from a swelling of the mouth called lampas.

Attacks of colic most frequently are the result of carelessness, and generally may be traced to a horse having drunk cold water when heated, or immediately after being fed, by being gorged with food after long fasting, or being chilled by currents of cold air.

When colic symptoms are accompanied by constipation, the first care must be to empty the bowels by "back raking" and injections of warm water.
