Student on the Job

The College Work-Study Program (CWSP) provides financial support through employment for students with documented need.

Mary Ellen Madigan of Behrend's financial aid office explained how the program works at Penn-State. "It is a federally subsidized program. Penn State pays twenty cents on every dollar the student makes and the federal government pays eighty cents," she explained.

At Penn State, the most a person is awarded is $2,000 dollars a year. "There are a few exceptions for those who need more aid," said Madigan.

Students aren't allowed to work longer than twenty hours a week while school is in session. During school breaks and un-enrolled summer sessions, a student is allowed to work up to forty hours a week. The objective is to avoid letting work conflict with the students' studies.

Just this year the minimum wage at Penn State was raised to $4 per hour.

There are currently 250 students enrolled in Behrend's work-study program and students who have already received aid through the program must re-apply for each academic year.

Eligibility for work-study is based on financial need. Applications are available in the Financial Aid Office, 221 Glennhill Farmhouse, phone 898-6162.

When work-study is awarded to a student, the student receives two copies of the award letter. One of the copies should be signed by the student and checked in the designated spot for acceptance. The letter is then returned to the Office of Student Aid by the due date.

At the beginning of each year, faculty members are asked to submit to the financial aid office any positions they would like to have filled by a student in the work-study program. After the information is submitted a list of available positions is typed up and sent out to the students in the program. From there, it is up to the students to find jobs that suit them.

Students must also realize that approval for work-study doesn't guarantee that they will get a job. It only means that a position is available to eligible students.

There are several types of positions available at Behrend, but students must apply promptly to get their preferred positions.

Leslie Daniel is a sophomore work-study student currently working in the School of Communications as a Research Assistant. Her job involves library research on various communication issues and minimal computer work. "As a communications major, my job gives me a chance to learn more about the communication field," she said.

Freshmen Connie Walker describes her duties for Police and Safety: "I answer the phones, take emergency calls and send the messages to the cops. If I wanted to notify a police officer of a burglary, I would get on the telephone and say base to or cop car to whatever code number the copy has."

She also gives out listed campus numbers of faculty and students. Walker works from midnight to 8 am, but says "It's really not a problem because I have an 8 am class and after that I'm finished for the day and can sleep it off."

The Registrar's office is Alyshia Goss' place of work. "I like the tasks, the people, and the flexible hours," she said of her position.

Rommel Taylor works in the Admissions Office. His job entails answering the phone and typing. He also volunteers to give tours to prospective students and their families. "I like giving tours because as a freshmen, I feel I'm more apt to give a realistic view of college life," said Taylor. "Mostly upperclassmen give the tours, but because I was interested in giving them, an upperclassmen trained me."

Damian Tucker serves as a Night Assistant. "It's a relatively easy job," Tucker said. "You sit in the lobby of your assigned residence hall and make sure no one makes noise or destroys the lobby, and, at times, you help the Resident Assistant." There are two shifts for the night assistant: 8 pm-4 am and 12 am-4 or 5 am. "This job gives you a chance to study when it's quiet and you get to know a lot of people."

What most students like best about the work-study program is that, unlike most federal aid programs, work-study pays the student directly by check. Instead of having the money credited to their account, they have a chance to see what they worked for and have a choice of how to utilize their check.

army, so the massacre did away with many of Poland's most intelligent citizens. The medal, illegally forged in 1985, represents what's "been lost in Poland in the last forty years," said Seroka.

Dean Lilley, upon receiving the medal, stated that he was "very proud to have been given the medallion." The medallion is one of at least three, one of which was given to British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Dombrowski stated that he also "feels proud that Dr. Lilley and Dr. Seroka chose to present me with this medal", and it "means a lot to the Polish community in Erie."

Seroka was very honored and pleased to be given the award -- personally it is a link with his past and heritage, professionally it is an honor to receive such an important award, he said. He stated that Lech Walesa, the winner of the Nobel Peace Prize,
