Officer Allen holds programs on date rape and burglary

by Cristin Hayes
Collegian Staff Writer

On Thursday, November 9, Police and Safety Officer Tod Allen held programs on date rape and burglary prevention in order to inform students about protecting themselves.

Allen gave handouts to students with date and acquaintance rape prevention tips. These handouts suggested that students should go on double or group dates the first several times they go out with a person, say no if you mean no, and if you are raped to get medical attention as soon as possible, as well as other tips on protecting yourself and knowing what constitutes rape.

Props were set up to show students what types of locks work best to protect them from burglary. Allen suggests that everyone should have some type of dead bolt lock for the best protection.

These programs were just two areas Allen has been working with this year. Earlier in the semester Allen was active in Alcohol Awareness Week, which was dedicated to informing students about alcohol, its effects, and the consequences that go with using it.

"By the age of 21, students have seen over 100 thousand beer commercials," said Allen, "I don't condemn alcohol, it's part of our society. I condemn its abuse."

There is a new area that is being looked at concerning alcohol and its effects. This area is alcohol showing up on psychological tests that are used for job placement or other areas. The alcohol only shows up if you are an extremely heavy drinker, but still is a factor in job placement.

Allen is looking into starting a class on peer education next fall. This class would be to teach students how to become trainers to go out and do programs similar to Allen's.

He will also be targeting drug and alcohol abuse in the future. Allen would like to have a take off of Alcohol Awareness Week with Drug Awareness Week.

Laurie O'Sullivan, the Niagara and Perry Coordinator, has also come up with some ideas for programs on date rape that Allen would like to work on. Allen would like to inform students from the laws point of view, possibly a nurses point of view, as well as others so students get an idea of what is really involved.

Allen is also researching doing a type of Health Awareness program. This program would look at nutrition, physical fitness, psychological fitness, lifestyles, and other factors that add to a healthy lifestyle.

Allen says, "I like to educate and bring new angles to programs."

Fines levied

Three Behrend students were brought before District Justice Pete Nakowski last Thursday.

Nakowski assessed fines as well as court costs for the three students who entered guilty pleas for charges of underage drinking. Their fines ranged from between $100 to $300.

Student services starts new program

The Office of Student Activities, in an effort to service the growing number of student clubs and organizations, has initiated a new program.

The Student Organization Consultant Program, initiated by John P. Downey and David Shields, will work out of the Student Activities office. There will be four Student Organization Consultants each handling one of four major types of groups: Academic, Special Interest, Greeks & Honor Societies, and Social/Recreational and Media Organizations.

Downey and Shields, having seen similar programs instituted at other colleges, realized it could assist with Behrend's fifty-six clubs and organizations. The four students will be available for help in almost any area of the organization, including fundraising, programming, membership retention and meeting management.

This year's four consultants are Chuck Groger (Special Interest Organizations), Joe Stevenson (Greeks and Honor Societies), Calandra Matthews (Academic organizations), and Brent Vernon (Social/Recreational and Media organizations).

"These four students were chosen because of their previous experience in activities," said Downey. As well as working as a liaison between the organizations and the Office of Student Activities, they will be responsible for writing one page briefs on topics such as fundraising, publicity, and parliamentary procedure which can be used by student organizations.

The Student Activities leadership library is also available to members of any student organizations and will be constantly updated and improve by the consultants.

The consultants are currently getting in contact with their respective organizations to set up an initial contact meeting.

Anyone with questions should contact John P. Downey or David Shields at 898-6171 or stop by the Office of Student Activities.
