Do you think spring break should occur later in the school year and, if so, why?

"Yes. I think it should because I think having it so early in the semester makes the remainder of the semester seem a lot longer."

Seth Bremmer
2nd semester
Psychology

"I'm indifferent - I needed the break when it came but I'll probably need one later too."

Bonnie Larson

degree at all, then at the dawn of the second millennium, when we are becoming a global community, they should include learning about other cultures.

Don't think of it as extra, as frosting. Just as one should know something about mathematics, political science, literature, history, science, one should know these other things in order to be truly educated. When women's studies and black studies programs die out, I'll be in the cheering section, because it will mean that the mainstream of the disciplines has incorporated their knowledge and achievements.

This university and this college are trying hard to hear the unheard voices, and I am proud of being a part of this process. Our local administration is trying, and Provost Lilley should be encouraged. Our student services staff are right at the heart of the effort--Chris Reber, Elvage Murphy, John Downey, David Shields, Biddy Brooks, Gerald Spates, P.J. Brown.

Chris, you have a real opportunity here. Is there any room for you to change your mind about this? You say it gives you a headache. Take an ibuprofen and then come to a cultural diversity event, where you'll probably find that every viewpoint is welcomed, including your own. There's a race relations forum in Reed Lecture Hall on 3/15 at 7:30. I'd like to see you there.
