Floyd's "Wall" to be staged in Berlin

by Robb Frederick

Ex-Pink Floyd member Roger Waters will perform the band's epic musical The Wall at another famous wall in Berlin. The show, which has previously been staged in only four cities, will include re-creations of original props and several to-be-announced guest musicians. Waters left the band three years ago.

• Bon Jovi guitarist Richie Sambora steps out on his own for the soundtrack to The Adventures of Ford Fairlane, which stars comic Andrew Dice Clay. Sambora's contribution to the soundtrack will be a cover of Jimi Hendrix's "The Wind Cries Mary."

• The Supreme Court left intact a ban on school dances in a small Missouri town last week where officials complained that "dancing is sinful, even satanic." (Damn, no Lambada.) The case was raised after residents claimed the ban was religiously motivated, thus violating the constitutional requirement of separation of church and state.

• A recent "World in Action" UK television documentary offered some heavy accusations against the Rainforest Foundation, which was founded in part by Sting. The documentary claimed that 15 Brazilian Indians had died from malaria after the Foundation delayed resettling them. The ex-Police frontman denied the claims, but he admitted that one tribe member had died.

• Now here's an interesting entertainment alternative: Go to a crowded playground and yell "Cowabunga." Never before have I seen so many children compete to prove their superiority in the field of reptilian-inspired martial arts.

• Rappers Kid 'N Play, fresh from their major roles in the film House Party, will star in a Saturday morning series to debut this fall. The half-hour show, which alternates segments of animation and live action, will contain original music by the pair.

• Peter Gabriel has again teamed up with producer Daniel Lanois, who helped with the creation of Gabriel's successful album So.

• England's Sunday Times has reported that Paul McCartney is Britain's wealthiest rock star, with a net worth of over 350 million pounds.

• Prince will release a double album soundtrack to his upcoming film Graffiti Bridge. The disc will include nine new songs, including "Shockadelic," "The question of U," and "Joy in Repitition." Three singles are slated for release before the film reaches screens across the nation.

• Rick Grech, the former bassist and violin player for the Family and Blind Faith died of kidney and liver failure on March 17. Grech's career peaked during his time with Blind Faith, which teamed him with Eric Clapton, Steve Winwood, and Ginger Baker.

• Janet Jackson received a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame on April 20. Mayor Tom Bradley was expected to proclaim the week "Janet Jackson Week in Los Angeles." Do L.A. city schools allow time off to honor great citizens of this caliber?

• The Grateful Dead have donated the song "We Can Run" to the National Audubon Society for use in a music video campaign to enhance the environmental group's image. The clip should surface on MTV and other video programs within the next few weeks.

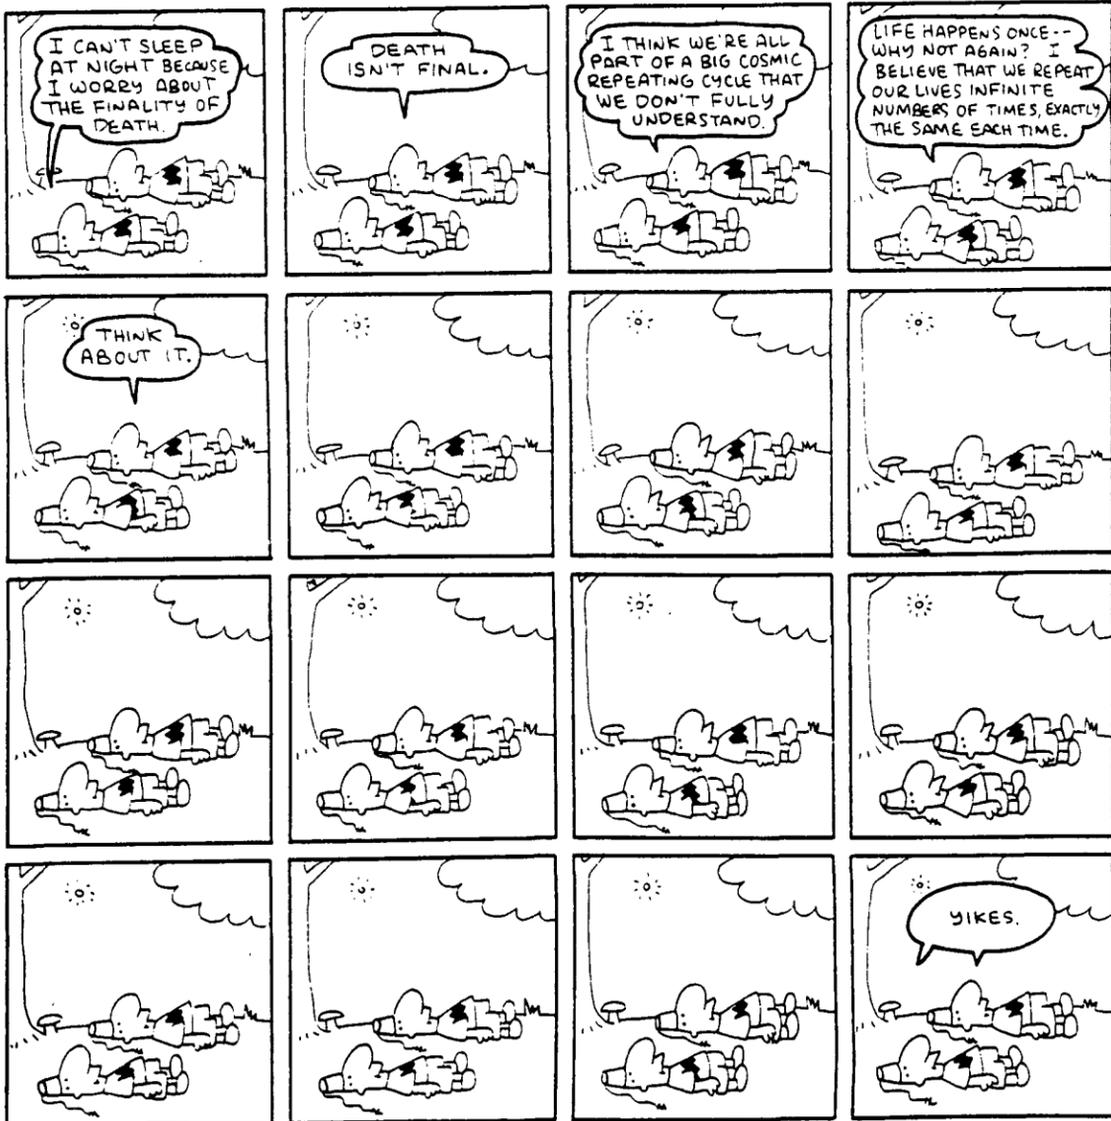

• Tompson Twins Tom Bailey and Alannah Currie recently returned from India with native recordings they hope to mold into "a strange Asian-Anglo album."

• Let's hear it for responsible journalism. The Globe, that trashy tabloid of choice, recently announced that Michael Jackson will replace John Lennon for a Beatles reunion tour! The Globe actually quotes Jackson as saying "no one can ever replace John Lennon, but I'm as close to it as anyone will ever come." Just who the hell are these "industry insiders" anyway?

• Not to be outdone, the Star claimed that Debbie Gibson has expressed her desire to bare it all for Playboy magazine. Not a pleasant thought, but still better than Michael Jackson trying to be Lennon.
