Canadian and National Football League looking at "The Rocket" Ismail

The Canadian Football League's Toronto Argonauts are setting their eyes on the stars and looking for a rocket to take them there...Raghib "Rocket" Ismail, that is.

The Argonauts, owned by Bruce McNall (who gave Wayne Gretzky a sweet contract to play for his Los Angeles Kings), is looking to hitch their chariot to Notre Dame's standout wide receiver.

"I look for unique opportunities...Not every football player is Rocket, just as not every hockey player is Wayne Gretzky," McNall said.

Organization insiders say McNall is prepared to offer Ismail around $3 million a year for two or three years, depending on specific contract stipulations.

Ed Abram, Ismail's agent, said he spoke last Thursday with Argonaut General Manager Mike McCarthy, but had yet to receive a "formal offer."

"If they put something on the table that is extremely attractive...logic dictates we take a look at it in a most serious way," he said.

Abram is still talking with the New England Patriots, who pick first in this year's NFL draft.
