Reliving the holocaust

Slide presentation to trace historical persecution

by Bill Goodman
The Collegian

In her slide presentation this morning at 9:30 in the Reed Lecture Hall, Lee Rosenberg will share her feelings and the experiences of her "Journey of Conscience" into the heart of the world of the Jewish Holocaust.

She stated that the purpose of her presentation is to show the Jewish way of life before World War II as compared to how their way of life is in Europe today, as well as to raise the consciousness of her listeners to make sure that they "never forget what happened."

In 1983, Rosenberg and other adult children of holocaust survivors traveled throughout Eastern Europe, visiting sites of concentration camps and Jewish ghettos where their parents and ancestors lived.

Rosenberg's father survived the concentration camps of Auschwitz and Dachau, and during the war her mother lived in the Jewish ghetto in Iasi, Romania.

Rosenberg considers the trip to be very personal. "I tried to make a spiritual connection with my ancestors," she said.

By attempting to reconstruct the lives of her parents, she developed a deeper understanding of their hardships, the value of the sanctity of human life, and a feeling of responsibility to keep the memory of their ordeal alive.

Rosenberg's presentation is being sponsored by The Jewish Community Council of Erie, Psi Chi, and the Psychology Club.

Dr. Carl Kallgren, Professor of Psychology and Psi Chi and Psychology Club advisor, explained the importance of the Holocaust to the field of Social Psychology. "Out group definition was one of the significant factors in the creation of Social Psychology."

In 1935, The Nuremberg Laws segregated Jews from the mainstream of German life. As a historic out group, the Jews of the Holocaust represent an important illustration of how societies can be controlled by one another.

Pam Caudill, secretary of Psi Chi, was excited to have Rosenberg speak because the speech comes at an important anniversary of the Holocaust.

Caudill feels it is important that students realize that the effects of the war are being felt even a generation later.

Police report:

Student burned in lab; car vandalism continues

On Monday, two students reported their vehicles vandalized in the Apartment parking lot. The first student reported that a sandbag had been placed beneath his left rear tire. When the student backed out of the space, the sandbag caused damage to his vehicle. The mirror and antenna of the second student's vehicle had been damaged as well.

Medical Assist Officers also responded Monday to a student who had burned his hand while working in a lab in the Otto Behrend Science Building. The student was taken to the Health Center for treatment.
