Behrend sidewalks. . . the best anywhere

There's something neat about Behrend. Something that you don't realize until you're away from it for awhile. Now that I have entered my senior year, I am starting to see that light at the end of the tunnel. It's the light that says, "You're almost done with school, and you better start looking for a job."

So the other week, I packed my briefcase full of resumes, donned my good suit, and went to University Park for a Job Fair. I looked at a lot of companies, shook a lot of hands, and picked up a lot of brochures, but nothing really interested me, so I decided to take a walk and get something to eat.

As I walked through the campus and passed countless people on the sidewalk, I noticed something odd. Nobody was offering pleasant "hellos" or the quick "how ya' doing" to anybody. Everyone had this enormous interest in the sidewalk. Nobody wanted to look up, they just stared down as they walked.

I tried to figure out what was so interesting about the sidewalk, thinking that possibly there was money on the ground, but to me it looked just like all of the other sidewalks that I have walked on, except the ones here at Behrend.

The thing that is neat about Behrend is something that a friend of mine once described as "sidewalk etiquette."

When you walk down the sidewalks at Behrend and you give a passersby a "hello" or a "how ya' doing," you can be guaranteed that you will receive a friendly response. And more than likely, you have just made a new friend.

And I like that.
