Sorority growth halted by SGA vote

for the sorority interest group. "Out of 1,075 girls on campus, only eight percent are currently involved in Greek life. I think that shows there is room for another sorority."

"We have been trying to form a new sorority since the fall of 1990, and are excited and want to be part of the Behrend System. Unfortunately, when we let it be known at times, we have been received negatively."

Panhellenic Council advisor Maureen Finn says the cap is a necessity.

"The National Panhellenic Conference has guidelines which state that if a group is chartering on campus, then that group must be given enough members to get up to speed with other groups," she said.

According to David Shields, IFC advisor, the two-year-old cap was extended in order to build the structures of the existing fraternities. "The infrastructure for the fraternities is still not there yet; they still have a lot of internal building to do."

This "internal building" consists of developing new leadership programs and a better governing council for the fraternities.

PSU stops selling Playboy

STATE COLLEGE, PA -- Penn State University has stopped selling Playboy magazine at its University Park campus bookstore, only four months after nine of its students appeared in a photographic essay of "The girls of the Big Ten."

University business officials said the decision was a business move not related to a woman's group protest outside the bookstore last fall.

"We looked at the question of whether it was really selling," said James Wagner, the university's vice president for business and operations. "I wouldn't see it coming back unless we get some huge demand."

Two of the nine students were partially dressed in the essay, while the other seven were nude.
